MDs want Jubilee head out

Medical staff votes non-confidence

Board member Peter Bunn echoed the call and went further — he said the whole board should resign.

The call for Prentice to quit came after 120 members of the medical staff were unanimous in voting non-confidence in Prentice at a meeting Tuesday night.

At a press conference today, RJH chief of medical staff Dr. Elinor Powell, said Prenctice has abandoned development of the hospital.

"His only aim appears to be to restrict spending to arbitrarily set limits. If one service is expanded, another is cut back to the danger limit," says Powell.

She said Prentice submitted a budget to the government that was substantially less than the determined need.

This was done despite the fact Health Minister Bob McClelland has announced that the hospital's deficit of $1.5 million dollars would be picked up and that spending limits would not be imposed.

Dr. Powell said the doctors received a letter from McClelland at their meeting assuring them that further funds are available.

Former Conservative leader, Dr. Scott Wallace, who has criticised Prentice in the past, said the meaning of McClelland's letter is clear.

"It's only fair to say that the hospital itself submitted a budget to the government that was less than the need. Part of the blame clearly rests with the financial committee of the board," Wallace said.

The medical staff also criticised Prentice because they were denied input in the selection of a new executive director.

They say they back Micheal Butcher as RJH's new executive director but said Dr. Powell was constantly frustrated in her attempts to discuss the appointment.

The dispute between the doctors and Prentice has been simmering for some time.

Dr. Powell cited a July 3 report in the Times in which Prentice said that the hospital was determined to stay within its budget and said the solution is for fewer people to get sick.

In that report, Prentice suggested that doctors were ordering unnecessary surgery.

Powell said doctors are disturbed that Prentice never publicly corrected those statements and in fact repeated them to a special meeting of the medical staff.

Meanwhile, Peter Bunn, Oak Bay council's representative on the hospital board, said today the whole board is probably to blame for the problems with the doctors and perhaps they should all resign.

He agreed that Prentice must go and suggested he should be replaced at the first board meeting after the

Turn back, passengers pleaded

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Passengers on a Pacific Coastal Airlines plane which crashed in dense fog on northern Vancouver Island Tuesday urged the pilot to turn around moments before the plane struck a tree top and exploded in flames killing four people.

John Mathison, 28, of Campbell River, one of the first rescuers to reach the crash scene, said a survivor told him passengers became alarmed when the plane entered the fog.

They told the pilot not to try to climb over the fog bank, the survivor said.

He told Mathison that suddenly the side of a mountain loomed before them.

The pilot swung the plane sharply into a turn but a wing clipped a tree top.

"As soon as the plane hit, it just blew apart," the survivor told Mathison. "Everything was in flames and we jumped out."

Five of the passengers made it safely out of the wreckage. Four, including pilot Manfred Crandall, 53, of Gabriola Island, did not.

RCMP identified the other three dead as Grant William Horseman, 22, of Port Alberni, and Daniel Lucien Mallette and Peter Grant, both of Victoria.

Grant, 41, was a Sidney alderman.

Grant, of 2009 Courser Drive, worked for the provincial recreation and fitness branch and was on a business trip to Port Hardy to help the community develop a recreation plan.

He leaves his wife and two daughters, aged 12 and 13.

The survivors are Tony Vasha, of Cornerbook, Nfld., James Common, of Nanaimo, George Poplestone, of Ladysmith, Ernest Deer, of Comox and Dan Preshyon, of Nova Scotia.

The plane, a twin-engine 10-seat Britten Norman Islander, was on the final leg of a regularly scheduled flight from Nanaimo to Port Hardy with a stop at Comox.

Steve Smith, 20, who was with Mathison, said the plane was demolished.

Wreckage was strewn over a wide area along a ridge at about the 600-foot elevation 20 kilometres southeast of Port McNeill. Only part of the tail section remained intact.

Smith said four of the survivors were huddled behind an embankment 75 feet from the smoldering wreckage when he, Mathison and Alan Olney, 32, arrived about two hours after the crash.

Three of the survivors were badly burned, the fourth appeared to have a back injury.

A fifth survivor had somehow scrambled down the densely-bushed mountain side and was waiting on a beach when the first rescue party landed.

A Rescue Centre spokesman said the man was in such a state of shock he didn't even know his name.

Three of the survivors are in stable but serious condition in Vancouver General Hospital with major burns.

Two others — Preshyon, 22, and Vasha, 28, — are in stable condition with minor burns.

Preshyon and Vasha, who said they survived because they were sitting near the rear of the plane, said passengers were told before takeoff that fog in the Port Hardy area was expected to burn off before noon.

They said in an interview early today in Vancouver that the pilot swerved about for 10 minutes in an attempt to find clear sky.

"He kept going," said Preshyon. "He panicked. This is strictly my opinion anyway.

Bryce bites Tory bullet

MONTREAL (CP) — "It's been a rather humiliating two months," sighed Bryce Mackasey Tuesday night, hours after being fired from his $90,000-a-year job as chairman of the Air Canada board of directors.

Rumors of the Liberal appointee's impending dismissal have been rife almost since the day the Progressive Conservatives won the federal election, and Mackasey knew he was a marked man.

"I knew I had it coming ever since a statement by (Roch) LaSalle a couple of weeks ago," Mackasey said while lounging outside the airline's private box at Olympic Stadium during a rain delay in the Montreal Expos-Pittsburgh Pirates baseball game.

LaSalle, the federal supply and services minister, had said the Tories were intent on placing their own supporters into key government jobs, and he called Mackasey's Air Canada job a blatantly political appointment that could not go unanswered.

"I appreciate what Roch LaSalle said," Mackasey commented Tuesday. "At least he told the truth.

"I defy anyone to say I wasn't competent or didn't get along with the board members."

Mackasey refused to give details of the compensation coming to him as a result of being fired.

"There have been a lot of exaggerated statements about my pension," he said. "I'd compare mine to any other normal pension in Air Canada."

Speed limits to rise?

Highways Minister Alex Fraser said Tuesday it is time to look at highway speed limits with a view to raising them.

Fraser said B.C. motorists generally are driving faster than the speed limit and the fault may be with the speed limit itself and not the drivers.

"I've tested it myself and at 80 km/h, you're the last one on the road because everyone is going by. They make me feel like I'm standing still."

He said the highways have been improved and as a result the speed limits may be too low. He has asked his ministry to look at the possibility of raising them.

Specifically, he said, he is concerned about good two-lane roads now posted at 80 km-h.

"Perhaps it is time they were boosted to 90 km/h," Fraser said.

Everybody's up a tree

By JANE COVERNTON

Four days ago Bambi the cat got stuck up a very tall tree.

She cried and cried.

The neighbors phoned and phoned for help but the SPCA and the fire department said they couldn't do anything.

The SPCA operates on the theory that what goes up will eventually come down — especially cats when they get hungry or thirsty enough.

Enter Jean Settle of 161 Robertson.

Settle climbed the tree and got a few feet from the terrified cat.

But she forgot one thing.

Heights make her dizzy.

"I got a long ways up and I couldn't back down," she said.

The neighbors called the fire department again.

The firemen finally arrived, lights flashing, long ladder and all.

Bambi?

She apparently decided enough was enough.

She leaped down and took off down the street.

A few minutes later, Jean was looking for her boots, Colin was wandering down the street calling Bambi and the firemen were packing up their long ladder.

$272,657.70 tax evasion fine

HAMILTON (CP) — Simon Freedman, a 79-year-old businessman, was ordered Tuesday by a provincial court judge to pay what was called the highest fine for tax evasion ever levied against an individual Canadian.

Judge Peter Mitchell fined Freedman $272,657.70, which must be paid within 18 months in addition to $400,000 he owes Revenue Canada over unpaid taxes. There have been higher fines levied against firms.

Mitchell said Freedman would have been sentenced to jail but for his age.

Freedman, who worked as scrap manager for Kent Steel Products Ltd. — fined $277,000 for tax evasion Monday — admitted that he acted as a middleman in the sale of $859,607 worth of scrap steel to I. Waxman and Sons Ltd. The company paid in cash and in cheques made out to fictitious names and endorsed by Freedman.

Defence lawyer Murray Mazza said he will appeal the fine, which he said would bankrupt his client.

U.S. cracks down on DC-9 skins

Times News Services

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) today ordered all U.S. airlines operating one type of DC-9 jetliner to inspect for cracks in the planes' metal skin.

The order, contained in a telegraphed airworthiness directive, was prompted by an incident Monday in which the tail cone of an Air Canada DC-9 broke away while the plane was en route from Boston to Nova Scotia. The plane lost cabin pressure and had control difficulties but returned to Boston and landed safely.

Air Canada said today a "stress crack" had shown up four months ago in x-rays of the plane, but has yet to determine "how or why" it was overlooked.

Inspections this week have disclosed cracks on four other Air Canada DC-9s located in Toronto, Ottawa, Regina and Halifax.

FAA spokesman Dennis Feldman said the airworthiness directive "requires airlines to inspect for cracks in the aft pressure bulkhead, the emergency exit door jamb and bulkhead skin within 10 landings after receipt of the telegram for airplanes having more than 15,000 landings."

Feldman said said the order applies to those DC-9s that are not equipped with a stairway at the rear of the plane.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed Tuesday that the problem with the DC-9s has been known to the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration for three years, and the FAA approved modifications on the planes of other airlines to fix the problem.

Texas International revealed in Dallas that after discovering cracks in the tail section of one of its DC-9s three years ago engineers strengthened the tail section and reduced the problem to one of routine maintenance. The airline's other aircraft were then modified.

An Air Canada spokesman said he was unaware of any notification from FAA on the DC-9 problem but that the airline was told in 1976 by the manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas Inc., of the possibility of cracks in the rear pressure bulkheads of DC-9s.

He said a McDonnell Douglas service bulletin at that time gave airlines the option of making the structural modification or accelerating x-ray inspection of the bulkheads.

CBS News reported Tuesday that FAA computer records showed tail cones of other DC-9s have fallen off accidentally at least six times before, although the Air Canada incident was the first time a tail cone fell off during flight.

Offshore rights for B.C., too

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark plans to offer British Columbia the same full control over offshore resources that he recently arranged with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

A Clark aide said Tuesday the offer is "a logical extension of long-standing Conservative party policy."

Clark is to discuss the deal Friday night in a private meeting with Premier Bennett, to cap off a two-day western swing to Saskatoon, Calgary and High River, Alta., his hometown.

A Progressive Conservative election campaign platform to give total control of offshore resource management and profits to provincial governments led this fall to agreements in principle between the federal government and Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

Bennett has said he would insist on the same arrangement.

The agreements reached with the Eastern provinces provide for the elimination of a 1977 deal, arranged under the former Liberal administration, that gives 75 per cent of resource revenue to the provinces and 25 per cent to the federal government.

Friday, in Saskatoon, Clark is to address the Board of Trade with a speech that aides say will focus on Western economic development, particularly the agricultural industry.

In High River Saturday afternoon, Clark is to unveil a plaque to mark the opening of a new building holding the High River Times, a newspaper that his father and grandfather once owned and ran.

The newspaper and building now are owned by Glen Tanner, an aide said. Clark's unveiling of the plaque will mark his family's "historical ties."

Clark plans also to discuss other economic issues with Bennett, in preparation for a future first minister's meeting. Since the election Clark has visited eight other premiers. Premier Allan Blakeney is the last on the list.

One-to-one talks for Rhodesia pact

LONDON (UPI) — British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, battling to save the deadlocked Zimbabwe Rhodesian talks from breaking down, met privately with the Salisbury delegation today and a Salisbury spokesman said "very encouraging progress was made."

"From the look of things we should reach broad agreement fairly soon," the spokesman, Foreign Minister David Mukome said after the two-hour meeting.

The separate private talks were designed to iron out, if possible, disagreements over a future independence constitution that threatened to wreck the conference.

Mukome said Bishop Abel Muzorewa and former Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith took part in the meeting which was attended by a full lineup of leaders of the Salisbury government delegation.

He said the discussion centred on three points in the present Salisbury constitution which Britain has described as "defective".

These were:

— The so-called "blocking mechanism" that gives the 220,000 white minority a veto over major constitutional changes.

— The guaranteed 28 percent of seats in the Salisbury parliament allocated to the white minority.

— The commissions set up to run the public service, prison service police and defence forces.

Mukome said "very considerable and encouraging progress was made on all three points."

Another Salisbury delegation spokesman categorically denied a London newspaper report that Muzorewa has given Smith an "ultimatum" to drop his objections to concessions on any of the three points or else to return home now.

Mukome was asked about the possibility of a meeting between Muzorewa and the Patriotic Front guerrilla leaders in London.

"The process of getting a meeting is going on. The bishop has written a number of letters to them," Mukome said.

Police change their mind on how to handle rapist

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police have changed their minds about how women should react if they find themselves in a rape situation.

A new booklet published by the British Columbia Police Commission does not recommend screaming unless someone is nearby and ready to respond.

Instead, it recommends women:

—Keep cool so they can think.

—Start to decide how they are going to handle the situation.

—Treat the rapist as a person — the worse he is treated, the worse he is likely to behave.

—Gain his confidence because he may resort to violence if he considers the woman a threat.

—Go along until it seems possible to escape safely.

The booklet represents a change in police policy. An earlier pamphlet sponsored by the Vancouver police deparment recommended that the victim scream and use any weapon available.

Some police feel the commission yielded to pressure from women's and rape relief organizations opposed to violent resistance by rape victims.

The booklet, based on a report by police in Aspen, Colo., will be available soon to women's groups.

It recommends struggling only if the victim is an excellent fighter and is confident the rapist is unarmed and does not have an accomplice.

"Common sense is the best defence," the booklet says. "Try to talk your way out of it, tell him you are pregnant, that you have venereal disease or any other excuse."

The booklet does not support the use of weapons but suggests attacking the assailant's eyes or groin with maximum force if the victim is certain she will be successful.

Ferry burns to waterline

KIRKLAND, Wash. (AP) — A spectacular fire burned the old state ferry Kehloken to the waterline early today and police said arson was suspected.

Traffic was slowed on State Route 520 and the Evergreen Point floating bridge as curious spectators watched the fire on Lake Washington, the flames visible for miles.

The ferry was built in 1926 in Alameda, Calif., and acquired by the state from San Francisco in 1937.

No injuries were reported.

Gold's leap hovers

Times News Services

LONDON — Gold caught its breath today after days of massive leaps, opening at $373 per ounce against Tuesday's close of $372 with one leading dealer said he was "fighting shy."

In Zurich, gold opened slightly down at $377 against Monday's close of $377.75.

"Due to the prices reached in Hong Kong of around $390, we are fighting shy of opening," a dealer for bullion brokers Sharp and Pixley's said. "There have also been rumors that at the next U.S. auction, the amount to be sold will be substantially increased."

The chairman of the Credit Suisse Bank, Rainer Gut, predicted in Chicago that gold prices will continue to rise and urged the treasury to help stabilize prices by increasing the amount of its sales.

In Paris, the leftist newspaper Liberation published a gold-colored masthead today and urged readers to buy as many copies as they could.

It claimed each gold-hued copy contained 0.4 grams of the precious metal and that every copy bought at the street price of 59 cents was actually worth $4.80.

Announcing the completion and official opening of the

NORTH ISLAND HIGHWAY

Earlier this summer, paving of the Island Highway, no. 19 between Sayward and Woss Camp was completed. The 15,000 residents of Northern Vancouver Island now enjoy a first class road link south which reduces driving time between Port Hardy and Campbell River to about 2½ hours.

This section is 128 kilometres long with 24 new bridges and represents an expenditure of $65 million over a five-year period.

Visitors from other Island points and the Mainland will now be able to enjoy the North Island's great outdoor adventures... fishing, camping, hiking and exploring. There is a wealth of history and Indian lore in the area. Port McNeill, Port Hardy, Port Alice and other communities have rolled out the welcome mat. Plan to see this exciting area soon.

YOU ARE INVITED. On Friday, September 21 at Woss Camp the new section of Highway 19 will be officially opened by the Hon. William R. Bennett, Premier of the Province of British Columbia. The public is invited to attend this ceremony, which will commence at 11:00 a.m. Light refreshments will be served afterwards at the Woss Camp Community Hall.

Radiation hits teacher

VANCOUVER (CP) — Associate professor Jim Carrell has been sitting on a hot seat at the University of British Columbia for several weeks without knowing it.

The math instructor says he has been irradiated by a secret cache of radioactive Sodium 22 under his office and now he's hot about it, although colleagues say there's nothing to worry about.

Carrell, father of three children, said Monday he found several small cylinders of Sodium 22 which had been placed in a cardboard box under his office in the university math annex. The box had been piled on some containers in a small concrete room under his office.

He said the room has been used by the university as a storage area for nuclear waste for the last 12 years, apparently without the knowledge of anyone in the math department.

Carrell said colleague Dale Rolfsen found the radioactive bunker Monday when he looked through a screen door in the wall of the annex at an extreme angle and spotted a radiation warning sign on a second door located inside the room.

Carrell said today that he's demanded an accounting from the university of all radioactive waste.

He said the radioactive material is thought to have come from either the chemistry or geology departments and was to have been stored in the bunker until enough accumulated to warrant disposal.

Radioactive material from TRIUMF, a nuclear physics project, and the department of medicine is not stored in the bunker, Carrell said.

Dr. Karl Erdman, associate director of TRIUMF, said the reading is not considered unsafe by federal standards.

"A person would have to live in that office for 5,000 hours a year to get an unsafe exposure to radiation," said Erdman.

Radiation officer Bill Rachuk said the radioactive material is in the process of leaving the bunker and will be shipped for disposal to an Ontario site run by the federal government.

Federal standards allow workers involved with radioactive material to be exposed to a maximum of five roentgens a year.

Epidemic of lice reported

VANCOUVER (CP) — Children scratching their heads in two areas of the city's school district are not puzzling out the answer to a difficult problem.

They have lice.

Dr. Harold Krivel said Tuesday parents from one of the city's most affluent districts are affected.

Krivel said up to three cases a day are reported. "It's an epidemic."

Dr. Donald Higgins, the city's consultant on communicable diseases says there is an epidemic of headlice all over North America.

Ostracized dentist renews attack

VANCOUVER (CP) — The ostracized treasurer of the British Columbia College of Dental Surgeons continued his attack on other members of the association Tuesday by charging that the registrar had a alarm system installed at his home and paid for by the college.

Dr. Murray Bloom said in a news release that college registrar Dr. Roy Thordarson had the alarm system installed in his West Vancouver home March 15 by Knills Alarm Systems.

Bloom said the company billed Thordarson $1,700 for the job and the college paid for the installation.

"I have a copy of the invoice from the company and the cancelled cheque from the college paying for the work," said Bloom. "I'm now asking that the registrar repay the college in the amount of $1,700."

Bloom has been critical of the college's payments to elected officials since he took office in July. He said the college's locks have been changed so that he can't examine financial records in the evening when he has time away from his own practice.

"There is no record in the minutes to indicate approval of the payment for the alarm system at Dr. Thordarson's house," added Bloom.

The 27-member college is to meet Sept. 28 to deal with Bloom's accusations.

Explosive acid in schools?

A sensitive acid compound which is more powerful than TNT may be lying like booby traps in old school laboratory cupboards throughout B.C.

Education authorities contacted today said they are not aware of any picric acid being used in B.C. schools, but the compound could be in course lists at the high school level for Chemistry 12.

A spokesman said it is not a necessary chemical for that course.

Picric acid has been found in two Ontario schools and disposed of by demolition experts on the school grounds.

School District 61 has been aware of the hazard of picric acid since the late 1960s when a warning was issued to chemistry teachers in Greater Victoria.

As part of its surveillance of laboratory chemicals with a view to safety, the district is in process of preparing a list of hazardous substances.

A spokesman there said he has encountered picric acid in the past but not in B.C. schools and he would not expect to find any in local high schools.

But picric acid, described as yellow crystals or liquid, used to be common in school labs and might be expected to turn up in some older schools, the PCB employee said.

It may be used in minor quantities in the manufacture of match heads and is an ingredient of armour-piercing shells.

It is sensitive to heat and shock, particularly when through time it changes from liquid to crystalline form.

Chemist Dr. Rob McDonald, of the Institute of Ocean Sciences, said sinks have blown up when disposal was attempted by pouring it down a drain.

"It is not important in high school labs and I can't understand why it would be there," McDonald said.

Other acids do as well as picric in a school laboratory situation, he suggested, including perchloric acid which is not as hazardous if handled properly.

But that compound also is capable of exploding or bursting into flame when shocked or mixed with carbon or other organic compounds and is the substance which blew up in the Pacific Forestry laboratory in November 1976, seriously injuring a soil scientist.

In May, the education ministry asked schools to remove three poisons from labs — arsenic chloride, arsenic trioxide and arsenic pentoxide.

These are not fire or explosion-prone chemicals.

Vandals nearly cut off power

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — It was a minor miracle that a 500-kilovolt line did not fall after someone with a .22-calibre rifle shattered several glass insulators holding it, say British Columbia Hydro spokesmen.

If the line located at the Cottonwood River crossing had come down, half of the Peace River dam output which supplies part of the province's power would have be cut off, officials say.

The line, believed to have been shot about a week ago, was found hanging by one glass insulator by a maintenance crew.

Hydro production manager John Carmichael said it was fortunate the tower involved was one of the dead-end type — other types of towers might have collapsed and pulled down others like dominoes because of the 60,000-pound tension on the line.

He estimated repairs would cost about $10,000.

He said the cost factor could have been multiplied many times if the entire system had to be shut down because the Crown corporation would have been forced to purchase power elsewhere in the interim.

Hydro has a standing reward of up to $2,500 for information leading to positive identification of vandals.

Dave Robertson, hydro spokesman, said the vandalism was more than a nuisance — it is dangerous any time hydro repair crews must handle lines carrying such large amounts of power.

Nurse nice-guys no more: union

B.C.'s 12,500 hospital nurses will no longer be "nurse nice-guys" when the Registered Nurses of B.C. begins negotiations this fall with hospital employers, a union spokesman said Tuesday in Vancouver.

The chairman of the RNABC's union arm, Doris Shepherd, told delegates attending a wage and policy conference that nurses must be compensated for more than four years in the economic wilderness.

She said hospital nurses had had their purchasing power decreased by 7.5 per cent since 1975.

"No more nurse nice-guy," Shephered said.

Still a bad plan

The best that can be said about Joe Clark's mortgage tax credit plan is that it is one step better than the mortgage tax deductibility plan he originally proposed.

One step better than atrocious means the plan is still disastrous.

It is a plan that poses grave risks to an already deeply troubled Canadian economy without giving evidence that it will really do much to stimulate that economy. It is a plan for which all Canadians will have to pay significant sums, even though it will provide benefits to only a few — and mostly to those who don't really need them.

The costs of the plan are astronomic. The government's own estimates are that it will cost $575 million in the first year, rising to $2.5 billion by the fourth year when it is fully operational. For a government that is already struggling to cut down a deficit of about $12 billion, the sum must be staggering. For example, even if the government had, by 1982, managed to fulfill its goal of removing 60,000 civil servants from the government payroll, the saving from that would be only about half the sum to be spent on the tax credit plan.

The government will probably have to finance the plan through more deficit financing. (The suggestion that a little of the revenue will be made up by the discovery of thousands of secret mortgage moneylenders who haven't been paying taxes on that money is a nice one, but that income will still be a drop in the bucket compared to the over-all costs of the program.)

The new borrowings will tend to weaken the position of the Canadian dollar even further. Taxpayers will have to pay increased taxes in other areas just to make up the interest on the ever-increasing borrowings. The scheme will tend to add further inflationary pressures to the economy.

All these risks might be worth it if the plan was sure to provide great benefits to the economy in some other area. But not even Conservative Finance Minister John Crosbie himself can offer any evidence to that effect. He says only that he "certainly hope(s)" the new tax credits will stimulate the construction industry.

However, there are already about 30,000 unsold new homes on the Canadian market, and builders are not anticipating any rush to keep up with the demand.

And for whose benefit is all this being done? Mostly, it appears, for the middle class that are the backbone of Tory support across the country.

Government statistics suggest that of 9 million Canadian households, about 3.8 million will eventually be eligible for some sort of tax credit. The ones who will eventually end up with the biggest benefits appear to be those with mortgages of about $40,000 or $50,000 — usually people with annual incomes of about $15,000 to $30,000.

This is the area in which the small improvement has been made between the original election promise and Crosbie's final plan. Under the first proposal of the Tories, those earning $80,000 or $100,000 would probably have ended up with benefits just as large as those given people with incomes of $20,000 or so.

The small improvement does not, however, give any significant benefits to those who would appear to need it most — the country's poor. Nearly all the poor rent; they simply cannot afford to buy a house, and the new plan isn't going to change that. The poor, living from hand to mouth every month, can't save up enough money to make a down payment on the house they could later pay the tax deductible mortgage on.

Some small benefits will go to the pensioners on fixed incomes struggling to hang onto a house for which they have already paid, but they will receive much less help than the middle-income group.

Indeed the only group that may possibly be helped to own their own home is a miniscule number of marginal wage-earners for whom the extra government help will mean the difference between being able to afford the mortgage payments and not.

In fact, there is some question that even these people will benefit from the plan. The chances seem good that interest rates and real estate prices may rise to counterbalance the credits being given by the government. In that case, the full weight of the program will go to benefit the country's banks, trust companies, mortgage lenders and development companies.

The Clark government is proceeding with this plan for only one reason: because it promised to do so during last spring's election campaign. Nobody in the government has given any evidence of thinking that it is a good economic idea.

Politicians should keep their election promises, but they shouldn't make in the first place promises that will provide benefits to a few at considerable cost to the many.

FRED CLEVERLEY

What the byelections mean

WINNIPEG — Manitoba pundits, already touting the three provincial byelections scheduled for Oct. 16 as a popularity test for the two-year-old Conservative government headed by Sterling Lyon, seem to be ignoring the fact that if the constituencies vote just as they did in 1977, it will be no popularity contest at all.

In addition, to really reflect the popularity, or lack of it, of the Lyon administration in Manitoba, either the Liberals or the NDP would have to knock over the seat formerly held by Sidney Spivak, a seat many consider to be the safest Tory riding in urban Winnipeg.

No matter what the election results are, there will be many people itching to read into them meanings that suit their own political purposes. But since government is a numbers game, the worst that could happen to Sterling Lyon would be that he could lose one of the 33 seats he won in 1977. He would still have a comfortable, nine-seat margin to carry out his programs until the next general election.

Biggest burr

But the byelection results, should Lyon lose this seat, will be broadcast across the country as evidence of the dissatisfaction of Manitobans with the provincial government that sticks like the biggest burr under the saddle of those who preach managed economies and public spending rather than hard-nosed economics.

Lyon will not likely lose River Heights, a constitutency so safe that the NDP had to postpone its own nominating convention for the lack of a candidate. A Lyon win there would be written off as predictable, and no indicator of popularity.

But if Lyon loses Fort Rouge and Rossmere, which he did in 1977, there will be many who will seize on the losses as evidence that Lyon is indeed, as a social administration, slightly worse than Ghengis Khan and that his hard-nosed economic policies are soundly rejected by all right-thinking people who know the benefits of throwing public money at social problems in the hope of solving them.

These people will quickly forget that such policies that were part of the Schreyer administration, were so unpopular that they came close to costing the former premier his own seat.

In fact, if the NDP is successful in retaining Rossmere, they need only a few votes more than Schreyer got in 1977 to picture the victory as voter confirmation of dissatisfaction with government policies. It remains part of history that Rossmere voters were slightly, but only slightly more in favor of the NDP two years before Lyon's economic policies became fact.

The byelection in Fort Rouge has its own peculiarities. When voters there elected Lloyd Axworthy in 1977, the constituency was the only one in Manitoba to send a Liberal to the legislature. When Axworthy left to successfully contest the last federal election the Liberal party, one that ruled a span of time that was measured in decades under Douglas Campbell, disappeared from the political scene in the province.

While the Liberals have an able candidate in Winnipeg councillor June Westbury, they are at a disadvantage because the party has not had a Manitoba leader for nearly a year.

Her Conservative opponent is another Winnipeg city councillor, Gary Filmon, but Fort Rouge has not been Tory territory for nearly 10 years. The constituency has also successfully resisted a concerted attempt by the NDP to elect a potential cabinet member, Murdoch Mackay, bolstering Liberal hopes that it was a party seat, rather than an Axworthy seat.

When Manitoba voters denied Prime Minister Joe Clark his majority government in the last federal election by failing to vote solid, Tory blue, the blame was quickly allocated to Lyon and his provincial policies.

A disaster?

That federal election saw nine Conservatives elected in Manitoba, along with three New Democrats and two Liberals. But the interpretation stuck — Manitoba was considered to be a disaster because the Conservatives failed to elect at least 12 members.

That was not a provincial election, although provincial politicians, who had stayed away from the federal battle, took the blame.

Next month, Manitobans will replace three members of the Manitoba legislature who have left provincial politics since they were elected in 1977.

No one should be surprised to hear, when the results are in, that a repeat of 1977 results shows dissatisfaction with Lyon, and that the loss of a single government seat (byelection defeats are traditional for governments) represents dissatisfaction of such magnitude that street riots can be expected momentarily.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Patronage: an historic fact

From the recent flap about the Clark government's patronage you might suppose that this evil was something entirely new, unknown in the past, and easily eliminated by an honest prime minister.

It is as old, in fact, as politics under any governing system, no doubt was practised by the Egyptian pharaohs and, in cruder form, by the cave men, as even birds have their discriminatory pecking orders.

Nowadays patronage is distributed in Communist states with the use of bribes and machine guns, in democratic states with pious platitude (quite harmless because nobody believes them), in the private family with special privileges for the favored relatives.

In government, however, patronage can do serious mischief and a free society must fight it, as sin of all kinds is fought. But we need not expect to eliminate it so long as humans remain human.

Reward friends

The Clark government would be more than human if it did not reward its friends more than its enemies. Its mistake, in the early (and brief) days of innocence, is to admit so candidly one of the enduring facts of political life everywhere. And when the Liberal party denounces Conservative patronage, with shudders of moral revulsion, it is like the incendiary Emperor Nero denouncing arson.

In these times of fashionable disbelief, when all insitutions are mistrusted, we usually forget that the political party is a living (or dying) organism, essential to the health of the whole body politic and the democratic process.

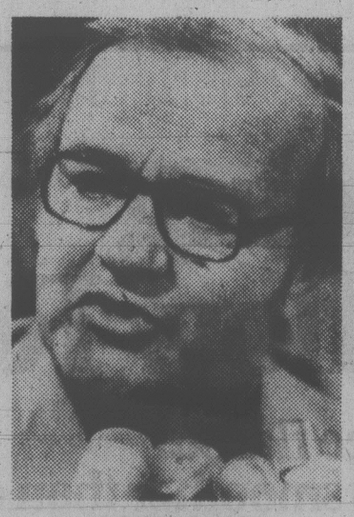

Without parties alternating in office the parliamentary system, originating in Britain, could not survive. Without the system, as in the one-party states like the USSR, democracy becomes a ritual farce and individual freedom dies.

If most citizens joined parties and worked through them for their own ideas, asking no wages, instead of blaming all their troubles on the government, no party would require huge campaign funds provided by self-serving interest groups.

It would be unnecessary to reward party workers with jobs or fund contributors with contracts. The party would not need the nourishment of patronage.

Since most people no longer join parties but hold them in suspicion, if not contempt, the once healthy organism languishes, with other institutions, until in Canada no truly national party is left.

Things were different in earlier, simpler times. As described by John W. Dafoe, in his classic book on Laurier, the party was then a vigorous state within the official state. It enforced its secret laws, rewards and

ROCH LaSALLE

Even now the Liberal party feels outraged by its defeat last spring, as if no alternative party were fit to govern, forgetting that it is lucky to be in opposition when the gross national product begins to fall.

Older Canadians will recall that in their youth almost every self-respecting citizen was a Conservative or a Liberal, proclaiming his political faith not only at the polls but all the time.

Conservative tariff protection versus Liberal free trade, the central issue and grand simplicity of politics, quaint as it seems today, was almost a religious exercise, the party almost a sacrament. Each house on the street was known to support one party and suspect the other.

The true-blue Conservative doubted the loyalty of Liberalism to the British Empire, though Laurier was an ardent monarchist and once proposed an Empire parliament in which he would be proud to sit.

The devout Liberal assumed that Conservatism was the running dog of Big Business, the servant of the Canadian Pacific Railway, though Borden nationalized the bankrupt railways built under Laurier and created the Canadian National Railway.

We have come a long way since those naive times, for better or worse, but in the honesty of politics certainly for the better. Canadian government, with all its ghastly blunders, is as honest as any in this naughty world, its patronage, though an evil, relatively minor, its scandals infrequent, its politicians generally impoverished by public service.

Money for hangers-on

Does anyone think, for example, that John A. Macdonald, Mackenzie King, Louis St. Laurent, Lester Pearson or John Diefenbaker (who all used patronage) were themselves corrupted by the funds raised for their personal support when they could have earned large fortunes in oruvate kufe?

It is not the elected person, with few exceptions, who makes money out of politics. It is the outsiders, the contractors, the local merchants, lawyers, hotel keepers, advertising agencies and hangers-on who get the gravy of patronage (and publicly deplore the morals of government).

They get too much gravy, of course, at the indirect cost of the taxpayer, and some appointments to lush jobs are indeed scandalous. But if the new Clark government is quickly losing its virginity, its candor is useful.

The synthetic outrage of the Liberal opposition, when patronage is admitted, even approved, and the just indignation of the citizenry, have burned the government's fingers at the start and should teach it to beware of fire from now on.

Parking principle

I am writing to bring to your attention a matter which may seem petty, but nevertheless involves an important principle.

I had been subpoenaed to witness in a friend's defence on Aug. 31. The case is not important. The lawyer informed me I would only be kept a short time.

The trial commenced at 2 p.m. When I returned to my car after spending three hours outside the courtroom, I found a parking ticket under my wiper. When I happened to mention this matter to the commissionaire inside the building, he told me City Hall would disregard my ticket as I was in court at the time.

Twelve days later I contacted City Hall, with the intention of informing the cashier that my ticket would be invalid. First, I was put through to the cashier's desk, and was told this was not the case; I was at an expired meter, and therefore must pay the fine. When I protested, I was given the number of the officer in charge of the Commissionaire Corps. This gentleman then told me exactly the same story, and added that there was a parkade not far away, and I had no business parking in the street; I must pay the ticket. Again, in answer to my frantic protests, I was given the number of yet another party — Roy Stewart, the man in charge of fines, at City Hall. Mr. Stewart offered another angle. The commissionaire in the courts apparently was hired by the provincial government, and had nothing to do with the other fellow issuing tickets in the street. I don't see that I am supposed to know the hiring policies of the Commissionaire Corps, and yet, this is the argument he offered in suggesting that I pay the fine.

I have received a handful of parking tickets in my time, and all rightly served. They have also been duly paid. In this case, I would have grudgingly given up the $3 fine, had I not been told by a man that appeared to be in authority that I need not do so. The fine has in the meantime risen to $10, and I do not intend to pay.

There is a principle involved now, and I would be doing an injustice to myself if I were to pay. As far as I can see, I have done nothing wrong. It would give me great relief to know there is somebody out there thinking the same. — Nancy F. Anderson, 2206 Sayward Street.

Life insurance

The article, 'Insurance ripoff' reprinted from the New York Times in your Aug. 11 issue could be very misleading unless explained and put into perspective.

The article purports to comment on a U.S. Federal Trade Commission report on life insurance. Not so. The report was prepared by the staff of the FTC and has not been approved by the FTC.

In calculating 1.3 per cent as an "industry-wide rate of return" on whole life policies, the FTC staff has used a mixture of products issued at different times, thus rendering the figure totally meaningless for any particular buyer. The FTC economist later admitted that some whole life policies have rates of return as high as seven, eight or nine per cent.

Canadian insurance companies are highly competitive in the U.S. market and it would be grossly unfair to apply to them any of the misleading statements in the FTC report.

The FTC staff report adds to the confusion by improperly separating a whole life policy into a combination of insurance protection and separate savings. Unlike a savings account, the cash value of a whole life policy may be used to provide extended term or paid up insurance benefits or a low cost policy loan. Moreover, the insurance proceeds are completely tax free at time of death. The FTC staff ignored these factors.

Curiously enough, another department of the U.S. government namely, the Veterans Administration, disagrees with the FTC staff. The VA in a recent pamphlet advises veterans who have the U.S. government term insurance that "The effect on our term policyowners of the steep insurance premium increases at the older ages has been of great concern to both the VA and the Congress."

The VA says "Since 1940, the majority of our term policyowners have gone through six terms of renewal which have increased their premiums substantially. At each renewal period we have suggested that consideration be given to converting their insurance to one of the permanent plans of insurance such as Ordinary Life, 20-Payment Life or 30-Payment Life plans." — R. L. Kayler, Executive Vice-President and General Counsel Life Underwriters Association of Canada.

Flaw in reasoning

Although our organization is primarily concerned with third world social justice it is not difficult to observe the same forces of oppression at home as there are abroad.

One example of this is the Canadian banks that have lobbied for the northern pipeline to be built before native land claims are settled and have also made loans to the racist South African government.

Another example is the Indian Affairs and foreign aid budgets. Much of the Indian Affairs budget goes to maintain a bureaucracy in Ottawa and the rest of Canada rather than to native people.

Mr. Fisher's articles imply that all native people want from the rest of us is continuous, free-flowing, hand-outs and that we should put an end to this by forcing them to become "simply Canadians". It is precisely this sort of reasoning that costs so much money as it inhibits native people from deciding on social/economic situations that will work for them. — Anne Fletcher, Southern Vancouver Island Section of the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace.

Pot of gold

By WILLIAM SCOBIE

LOS ANGELES — The astonishing economics of pot grasped the attention of U.S. lawmakers last week, as one of the West's most prized and profitable crops was brought in. It is "harvest home" time for the farmers of cannabis sativa.

A bumper season has produced a crop valued at around $400 million, up some 500 per cent over last year. Police admit that very little of it has been found and destroyed, despite frequent paramilitary forays, with spotter planes, into the remote, sparsely-populated hills of northern California, where most secret farms flourish.

Since the mid-1970s, when California smallholders took the heady leap into pot agri-business, growers in the thickly-forested hills have used elaborate warning and camouflage systems to protect their plots. Short-staffed rural police say they don't have the time or money to pursue every lead.

Now, in a growing climate of tolerance, legislators are wondering if marijuana could become a pot of gold at the end of California's fiscal rainbow.

"Highly responsible members of our chamber of commerce ask me if it doesn't make sense to decriminalize marijuana," says State Senator Barry Keane, in whose vast backwoods political fief the illegal farmers thrive. "There's a lot of unemployment here. We could use pot to broaden the tax base, create new jobs and diversify the economy."

Senator Keane is promoting a Bill to legalize cultivation, and circulating a survey soliciting his constituents' views. "It's the second biggest crop in my district, after all," he says breezily. "I'm told soil and climate are just right."

The grass is indeed greener in California. It is called sinsemilla (Spanish for seedless) and it's among the most potent grown anywhere. By eliminating male plants before they pollinate the female, growers force the female plant to produce more flowers and resin. The active chemical content may increase by tenfold — and on the New York streets a pound sells for $1,000 or more.

This method of cultivation — another first for California — has spread to Oregon (where a $100 million crop is expected this year), Arizona, and Hawaii, where marijuna brings in twice as much money as sugar cane.

Then there's the import market. Some $8 billion in U.S. money is going each year to little Colombia alone for pot. That is three times the value of Colombia's annual coffee sales.

In fact, says the Federal Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), if Marijuana Inc. was a coporation it might well be the third largest in the U.S., after General Motors and Exxon. Pot is a growth industry with annual sales of around $48 billion, the DEA estimates.

"The president is looking for 'unique solutions' to our financial troubles," says Robert Gnaizda, a former California Secretary for Health and Welfare. "Maybe he should consider legalizing marijuana. Colombia's exports of pot alone almost equal the total value of the U.S. foreign trade imbalance."

Gnaizda served in Governor Brown's first administration. He believes taxes on legalized pot could generate up to $8 billion in federal revenues annually. Alcohol and tobacco (with retail sales thought to be smaller than those of pot) brought in $7.7 billion last year.

California, ever the trend-setter, might lead the way to legalization on a state-by-state basis, says Gnaizda. He would bar tobacco company control and limit corporate farming, while promoting "family farming" on, say, modest four-acre plots.

A bumper crop sparks California boom

Peking protester packs up posters

By LINDA MATHEWS

PEKING — China's struggling human rights movement, dormant the past six months because of the arrests of its leaders, is springing back to life.

Emboldened by new legal codes upholding freedom of expression, Peking's dissidents have in the past week organized a new wave of demonstrations and mounted wallposter attacks on police brutality and official privilege. Over the weekend several underground journals suppressed in March were sold openly againat Peking's "Democracy Wall."

The reappearance of the journals, Explorations and April 5 Forum, once the most vocieferous proponents of Western-style democracy and free elections, may signal a return to the freewheeling protests of a year ago.

Among foreign diplomats here, there is speculation that the Peking authorities may be ready to release the protestors jailed in last spring's crackdown. The official press has hinted lately that the police dragnet that resulted in the arrests of 20 young dissidents in March and April may have been to extreme.

"The drift again is toward more tolerance for this kind of dissent," observed a Western diplomat. "There are pressures, generated both at home and abroad, that may force the central authorities here just to look the other way, however much they dislike 'Democracy Wall.'"

A newly adopted criminal code that says no one can be condemned as a counter-revolutionary merely for criticizing the government has "put the leadership on the spot," said a youthful Communist Party member who admits some sympathy toward the human rights movement.

If the authorities continue to detain dissidents without even bringing them to trial, "it will be very apparent to everyone that the law is being violated," said a party member. The masses will understand the contradiction.

China's expanding contacts with the rest of the world may also work in the dissident's favor. The upsurge in free expression developed soon after the visit of Vice President Walter F. Mondale, who supposedly underscored the Carter administration's concern about the spring crackdown.

Chairman Hua Guofeng's upcoming trip to Britain, Germany and France, where the human rights movement has been widely publicized, may also make the leadership think twice about suppressing the latest activity.

"The authorities are as conscious as the dissidents about how this is being received outside China," said a diplomat. "The dissidents feel protected by the press attention so they compete to see who can write the poster that will be on the Voice of America. And the people in charge obviously keep alert to the publicity, too."

In this freer atmosphere, the weekend scene at "Democracy Wall" was reminiscent of the movement's heyday last November. So many would-be writers came forward with posters that the wall — a brick fence around a bus terminal — soon filled up and clotheslines had to be strung up between nearby trees for the overflow.

Two staff members of the revived journal, Explorations, peddled copies of the magazine for 30 cents each and stuck up a poster demanding the release of their editor, one of those seized last spring. Plainclothes policemen snapped their pictures with brand-new Nikons and were in turn photographed by a young man who described himself as the staff photographer for the dissident journal.

"Democracy Wall," usually the canvas only for writers and poets, has suddenly sprouted paintings and drawings, most of them a far cry from the misty landscapes sanctioned by the party. One painting, entitled "The Great Wall of China," showed an abstract nude figure, bound like a prisoner with the coils of the Great Wall.

Several of the new posters denounced the special housing and shopping privileges accorded China's party members. Others accused the authorities of indifference toward the plight of the thousands of vagrants and displaced persons who have come to Peking seeking redress of their grievances.

The official newspapers have sounded those same themes, though in more muted tones, which may be the reason that few of the posters have been removed by the government censors who monitor the wall nightly. So far there have been only a handful of attacks on any of the current leaders; one unusually bitter broadside, accusing Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping of personally ordering last spring's arrests, survived only one night.

Analysts here consider it significant that the official press, including the authoritative People's Daily, has upbraided those police officers responsible for the arrests of dissidents last spring.

Bye-bye, silver bullets

The Lone Ranger is through. Washed up. He stands in a Los Angeles law office. Oriental rugs under foot. A Kandinsky on the wall. The desk rich and sleek, covered with writs, injunctions, habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari, nolo contendere, duces tecum, bills of attainder.

The lawyer has handled people like the Lone Ranger before. The world is full of them if you are a lawyer. People out of touch with reality. People who go around the country drawing down Big Jack by passing themselves off as the Lone Ranger, Popeye the Sailor Man, Boob McNutt, Secret Agent X-9, the Green Hornet.

"You're all washed up, Popeye" he tells them. Or, "O.K., Hornet, one more rendering of 'The Flight of the Bumble Bee' and we're going to slap you with so many injunctions you'll have to hawk your Orphan Annie decoder and Cocomalt shaker to pay your court costs."

The Lone Ranger is easier meat than most. He is getting old. He is 64 now. It shows. His mask is deeply wrinkled. Tonto urged him five years ago to see a plastic surgeon about having tucks taken in the eye slits, but the Lone Ranger refused. He is old-fashioned about too many things.

"I'll it to you straight from the shoulder, Ranger" the lawyer says. "You're through. Washed up. Over the hill."

The Lone Ranger's reflexes are slow. He would like to leap aboard his fiery horse with the speed of light and gallop away with a hearty "Heigh-ho, Silver!" He cannot. The lawyer's receptionist made him leave Silver outside on account of the oriental rugs. The Lone Ranger can read the secrets of a cold campfire, but he is no match for the guile of receptionists.

The lawyer urges the Lone Ranger to look at himself. An old man in a young world. A wrinkled man in a world whose heart goes out only to smooth men.

"I don't smoke or drink" says the Ranger. "I work out every morning to keep my body trim."

The lawyer has heard it all before. These old crocks are all alike. "I still eats my spinach three times a day and avoids all heavy lifting to keep my upper arms skinnier than Slim Summerville," Popeye once told him.

"I'm not talking two-for-a-penny Mary Janes, Ranger" says the lawyer. "I'm talking big law. Now come across with that mask."

The Lone Ranger recoils. They always recoil at this stage of the interview. The lawyer remembers how the Phantom recoiled when ordered to come across with both his mask and his form-fitting rubber suit, remembers how ridiculous the Phantom looked when it had been peeled off him. His entire body wrinkled like hands left too long in hot dish water.

The lawyer is not a cruel man. He remembers the years he sat by his television set, thumb in mouth, marvelling at the Lone Ranger. Once, he wanted to grow up to be the Lone Ranger's sidekick and gallop behind him on a small gray stallion named Zirconium.

Life for the lawyer has been a series of disappointments, except for the oriental rugs and the Kandinsky and the cunning receptionist. In law school he had wanted to grow up to be Perry Mason and save the innocent from the noose and be admired afterward by Paul Drake and Della for refusing to take a fee.

Instead, here he was, pushing around heroes for getting long in the tooth. He hoped the Lone Ranger wouldn't cry. He couldn't stand it when they cried. He remembered the Katzenjammer Kids, doddering octogenarians, weeping like babies when he told them it was time for the nursing home.

"Ranger," he says, "promise me you won't cry and I'll try to explain."

"I feel like crying," the Lone Ranger says. "It's the worst I've ever felt in my life. But I won't cry. The Lone Ranger doesn't cry."

The lawyer explains that his client owns the rights to the Lone Ranger and means to make a bundle from them. There used to be a young, new Lone Ranger, a smooth man. Having a dilapidated old Lone Ranger galloping the plains is bad for the young, new, smooth-man Lone Ranger image necessary for the making of bundles.

"You're trying to tell me I'm not the Lone Ranger any more?"

They always asked that. "You mean to tell me I'm not Flash Gordon any more?" Flash had asked when ordered to hand over Emperor Ming and the Planet Mongo. And the lawyer had said, "That's right — you're just Buster Crabbe now."

It was the only legal answer. To the Ranger he says, "From now on, you're just Clayton Moore. Your revels now are ended. Turn in your mask and your silver bullets, your white hat and your faithful Tonto and your fiery steed with the speed of light."

"What will I do for a living from now on?" the ex-Lone Ranger asks. The lawyer explains that this is a question nobody has been able to answer satisfactorily to retirees. Many of them, he says, find shuffle board fulfilling.

When the Ranger leaves, the lawyer considers calling in his receptionist and Paul Drake and telling them he is refusing to take a fee for this case. Instead he pushes the intercom button.

"You can send Buck Rogers in now" he says.

CRTC okay to takeover by B.C. Tel

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has approved the proposed purchase of GTE Automatic Electric (Canada) Ltd. and GTE Lenkurt Electric (Canada) Ltd. by the British Columbia Telephone Co.

In a decision Tuesday, the commission cited assurances by B.C. Tel that any losses incurred by the acquired companies would have no effect on telephone rates for subscribers.

GTE (Canada) and GTE Lenkurt are owned by GTE International of the United States. GTE International also holds the majority ownership in B.C. Tel.

GTE (Canada) manufactures telephone sets and other telephone equipment at its head office in Brockville, Ont. Lenkurt manufactures transmission equipment and components in Burnaby.

In approving the ownership change, the commission said the purchase price of $47.3 million was high, but this was not a reason to block the sale since telephone subscribers would be protected from any financial burden.

GTE (Canada) is to show a 15-per-cent return to the telephone company. If it does not, B.C. Tel will show such a return for purposes of calculating its income for regulatory purposes.

In Vancouver, Gordon MacFarlane, B.C. Tel's chief executive officer, said the decision was "an historic event for Western Canada and for B.C. Tel."

He said in a news release the approval of B.C. Tel's acquistion of the two companies should be viewed in the perspective of the province's need for additional secondary industry.

He said safeguards imposed by the commission were fitting and proper.

"We want a chance to do a good job and we have been given that chance."

B.C. Tel now will establish a high-technology research centre in the Vancouver area, MacFarlane said, and will aim to employ about 175 people within a year.

He said Automatic Electric is a manufacturer whose plant has been completely retooled in the past four years. It produces telephones and switching equipment.

Meanwhile, Gary Lauk (NDP — Vancouver Centre) Tuesday branded the deal as a "corporate device" to subsidize the firms' operating losses at taxpayers' expense.

Lauk, speaking at a hearing of the Federal Restrictive Trade Practices Commission in Vancouver, charged the plan was "cooked up with the willing complicity of the B.C. provincial government."

Socreds cool to bus shuttle plans

A proposal from Pacific Coach Lines for a shuttle bus service to replace the present through-bus on B.C. Ferries will be opposed by the provincial government, according to Oak Bay Socred MLA Brian Smith.

"There are strong objections to the shuttle bus proposal," he said.

Smith said he conducted a survey of ferry passengers on a recent trip to Vancouver and most said they would quit using the bus service if the shuttle plan was introduced.

Under the PCL proposal, bus service would be offered from downtown Victoria to Swartz Bay where passengers would get off and walk aboard the vessel. Luggage would also be carted aboard.

At Tsawwassen, the passengers would walk off the ferry and board a bus waiting on the other side.

It would save the time of bus drivers who would no longer be required to make the crossing. It would also result in a small saving of space on the ferry.

But Smith said the proposal represents a reduction in service to customers.

"They should be improving the service, not taking services away."

Smith said he raised an objection with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm, who is responsible for the bus system, and the minister indicated he would oppose a switch to shuttle buses.

SMITH
. . . many would use cars

Smith said he told the minister it would be a burden for senior citizens to have to make long walks in all kinds of weather as proposed in the shuttle bus system. And there would no longer be the security of a reserved seat on the bus.

"One of the attractions of the present bus system is that you can go from downtown-to-downtown without facing those long walks at the ferry terminals. If the bus service is reduced in this way, people will take their cars and that won't help the ferry service," Smith said.

"We must encourage the use of the bus service, not discourage it."

On a related issue, Smith said he was pleased to have helped get the PCL to reinstitute bus service on all ferry sailings between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen.

After a protest by the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, Smith raised the issue with Vander Zalm and the service was restored on the weekend.

Four sailings would not have had bus service under the previously-announced fall schedule.

Vander Zalm, who is reponsible for the government-operated bus system, said he has put a full list of available alternatives before the Social Services Committee.

The current depot is on land leased from the Empress Hotel.

The lease expires within a year and the hotel has other plans for it.

The city of Victoria leans towards a depot near Capital Iron on Store Street while another suggestion is to use the government employees' parking lot behind the Executive House Hotel.

Wolfe still bullish on B.C. economy

While the rest of the world is bracing for an international recession, Finance Minister Evan Wolfe is still bullish about B.C.'s economy.

Wolfe admitted he isn't up on the latest predictions from the International Monetary Fund but said the indications for B.C., especially in the export trade, are still very strong.

"We're not predicting anything of a recession in B.C.," he added.

In its annual report released earlier this week, the IMF painted a grim picture for the world economy in the coming year based on a worsening oil price situation.

It hinted at a world-wide recession because of the combined deflationary and inflationary results of the oil situation.

B.C.'s strong position in exporting resources should continue, Wolfe said, adding there is a lot of consumer confidence in the province.

For the past three years, B.C.'s inflation rate has run at almost a full percentage point better than the Canadian rate.

Wolfe said B.C. will continue to fare better than the rest of Canada even if there is a downrun in the economy.

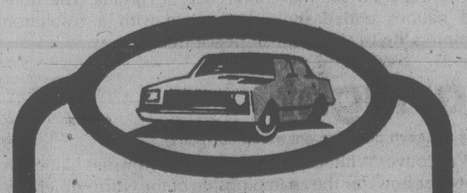

Union decertified

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks has been decertified by the Canada Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for 330 office workers at CP Air.

Jean Hall, spokesman for the accounting and computer service employees, said they applied to the board Tuesday for certification with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

The board was given 198 signatures of people in favor of certification with the machinists' union.

The higher car prices go, the better your business gets.

When you become a MAACO owner, inflation is on your side. That's because the more cars cost, the more people are likely to want to maintain, and retain, the ones they have.

There are almost 300 MAACO centers benefitting from this philosophy—each of them owned by an independent businessperson. In just eight years, MAACO has grown to be the largest auto painting and body works chain in North America. We've painted and repaired over one million cars—and that's just the beginning.

Outfall decision at last

The Capital Regional District's south coast sewerage committee on Tuesday unanimously approved a proposal to build a 750-foot sewage outfall from Kitty Island, a peninsula near McMicking Point in Oak Bay, to the centre of Enterprise Channel.

The decision ends a long-standing controversy stemming from earlier proposals to build a pumping station in Oak Bay and connect the northeast sewage trunk to Clover Point.

The new proposal, to cost about $1 million, ends the controversy and will save the contributing taxpayers of Oak Bay, Victoria and Saanich more than $5 million.

Joe Cunliffe of Willis, Cunliffe, Tait and Co. Ltd. said the final report will be ready by next February.

The committee, headed by city director Bob Wright, agreed a permit from the Pollution Control Branch should be sought once the final report is in.

The outfall, if ratified by the entire regional board, would be completed in 1980.

Oak Bay Ald. Doug Watts said his council and municipality staff had worked closely with Wright's committee and are pleased with the final result.

Cunliffe said the 42-inch pipe would be 60 feet deep at its terminus and the sewage would be chopped up before it enters the pipe.

REV. JAMES
... died Sunday

James memorial today

A memorial service was held today at Metropolitan United church for Rev. Francis Edward James, pastor of the church from 1952 to 1964.

Born in New Ross, County Wexford, Ireland in 1900, he died at his home here on Sunday.

He trained as a candidate for the Methodist ministry in 1925 in Winnipeg, just as the Methodists joined the Presbyterians to form the United Church.

In 1926 he was ordained a United Church minister in Edmonton, and a year later while serving at Olds, Alta., married Grace Peacock, the daughter of another United Church minister.

James served in various Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario postings, the last at High Park United in Toronto before coming to Victoria.

Here he presided over considerable growth in the congregation at Metropolitan United. He supervised extensive renovations to church buildings and also saw the Reg Harris Christian Education Centre opened.

Ill health forced him into early retirement in 1964, but he recovered to take on a special two-year training assignment in Jamaica.

He leaves his wife, two daughters, two sons and 11 grandchildren.

Down-to-earth business boost for Quebecers

MONTREAL (CP) — The name sounds like it might come from another galaxy, but a SODEQ has some down-to-earth benefits for small entrepreneurs and investors.

For the businessman, it means much-needed capital for expansion, while it allows the investor to deduct as much as $15,000 from his Quebec income tax.

SODEQ stands for Societe de Developpement de l'Entreprise Quebecoise and denotes a local investment corporation designed to channel funds for growth into small and medium-size manufacturing concerns in the province.

Two SODEQs have been licensed to date by the Quebec Securities Commission and several more are expected to be in operation by the end of the year.

They raise funds by selling stock in mimimum lots of $1,000 for which the provincial government has made generous concessions in its income tax laws.

In 1978, for instance, SODEQ investors were entitled to a 25-per-cent credit on provincial income tax. A stock purchase of $1,000 gave the investor a credit of $250 in the 1978 tax year.

The proposition is even more attractive this year because of the common share savings plan contained in the latest Quebec budget. Share purchasers can deduct their SODEQ investment, to a maximum of 20 per cent of their annual earnings or $15,000.

Since it began full operation in February, the Montreal SODEQ has loaned a total of $600,000 to four local manufacturers involved in food, drilling supply, furniture and textiles, said Viateur Heroux, its director general.

A stock issue late last year raised $375,000, and a first dividend of $1 per $10 share outstanding was paid in August. Heroux foresees a new issue of 500,000 shares at $13 apiece before year-end.

The SODEQ in the Beauce region south of Quebec City raised $445,000 from its first stock issue and plans a second issue this year.

Regional manufacturing enterprises with assets of less than $7.5 million and fewer than 200 employees are eligible for SODEQ aid.

Bergeron says the usual approach of the Montreal branch is to lend money for a five-year period, although it has the option of being repaid in shares of each business.

The Montreal SODEQ has been approached for loans by 40 firms, and no decision has yet been made in 20 of those requests. Heroux said he expects to invest in three or four firms a month within the next year.

Pierre-Andre Pomerleau, manager of the Beauce SODEQ, says his organization has invested in two small businesses in the area since getting off the ground in July.

He said decisions are pending on 13 loan requests, while seven companies were turned down because of doubts about the quality of their management.

The securities commission has granted four embryonic SODEQs the right to issue prospectuses, while two others — including a second for the Montreal area and the first in Quebec City — are in advanced organization stages.

Empire building charge denied

TORONTO (CP) — The 55,000-member Canadian Federation of Independent Business has denied allegations by a fledgling rival group that the federation is empire-building at the expense of its members.

Federation president John Bulloch took issue Tuesday with the newly-formed Canadian Organization for Small Business, with which the federation is involved in a lawsuit and which has recruited some of its members from the federation.

Dan Horigan, president of the new group, accused the federation of not representing its members and said only about 10 per cent of the federation's $4 million annual budget is spent directly on behalf of small business.

Bulloch's group recently purchased land in north Toronto for a $5 million head office and Horigan said it was another instance of empire-building at members' expense.

Oil sands slowdown if new sources materialize

By GARRY FAIRBAIRN

BUCHAREST (CP) — If optimistic predictions about huge new Canadian oil discoveries are realized, Canada would be able to slow down costly development of Alberta's oil sands, says the chairman of the National Energy Board.

J. G. Stabback said in an interview that oil sands plants, which currently cost about $5 billion for 100,000 barrels daily capacity, are extremely expensive.

"Arctic oil, even with the associated high costs, would have a lower unit cost than the next generation of oil sands plants," he said.

Another possibility, he hinted, is that Canada for economic reasons might once again become a major net oil exporter.

If large discoveries are made both off Labrador and in the Arctic, he said, it is unlikely that either one would be ignored while the other is exploited: "It would get to market one way or the other."

But exports would be less likely than the alternative of using the oil domestically, reducing the oil sands expansion rate so that the domestic market could absorb any large new finds.

Stabback, however, emphasized that predictions of billions upon billions of barrels of oil being found off the Labrador and Greenland coasts and in the Canadian Arctic are still rather speculative.

"Exploration geologies have expansionary ideas," he said. "They have to talk big and try to justify it later."

Among submissions to the World Petroleum Congress have been predictions that the Arctic could be producing oil the year round in five years and that 10 billion barrels of oil are lying off the Labrador coast.

But a lot of oil would have to be found before Canada's net oil deficiency could be covered and exports could be considered, Stabback said.

Canada currently imports 350,000 barrels a day more than it exports and that deficiency is expected to rise to 800,000 barrels a day in the late 1980s before enough oil sands plants can be operational to begin reducing the costly deficit.

"In Canada we feel quite concerned that the public has got to be aware that massive investments are going to have to be made in oil sand plants and other energy developments," Stabback said.

Authorities could not responsibly count on optimistic Arctic or Labrador predictions being realized in time.

Work had to proceed on known energy resources and especially on energy conservation — "the cheapest barrel of oil you are going to get is the barrel of oil saved or not used."

"It will be a tight supply situation in the 1980s and part of our energy needs are just going to have to be met by the use of coal, nuclear power and to a lesser extent renewable resources like solar power."

The picture could change if Canada is lucky enough to make large finds in both major offshore areas.

"If we were fortunate enough to find large basins that were productive, Labrador and the Arctic, I think the government would have to consider how much oil it wants to let sit in the ground."

To get any supply from high-cost offshore areas, he said, it would be economically necessary to have extremely large-scale production.

That all-or-nothing choice would be the only hope for would-be exporters, who could argue that export volumes would be necessary to justify extracting Arctic and Labrador oil for Canadians.

In another interview, the chairman of Syncrude Canada Ltd. said he hopes the Arctic-Labrador predictions prove correct but "it would not be prudent or responsible" to rely on such finds.

Brent Scott, whose company operates the largest oil sands mining plant in the world, said oil sands will be essential no matter what else happens.

"No matter how optimistic we may be about Labrador and the Arctic, tar sands plants have such a long lead time and they will need to be developed sooner or later . . . they need to be developed slowly and steadily against future demand."

Large sums would also have to be poured into other costly alternatives like coal gasification projects, Scott said.

"It will not help very much in the 1980s but it might be saving everybody's bacon in the 1990s."

Crude oil ideal 'unobtainable'

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Federal objectives of obtaining self-sufficiency in crude oil by 1990 are unobtainable, Jack MacLeod, senior vice-president of Shell Canada Ltd., has said.

Reaching that goal even by 2000 would require severe conservation, he told a coal conference.

It was also assumed that in order to attain oil self-sufficiency, frontier supplies would have to be available and development of oil sands and heavy oil would accelerate.

Coal conversion to yield synthetic fuels might soon become feasible if energy prices continue to rise.

Let's get old Fibber back

By HOWARD ROSENBERG
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — If this is the shape of prime time to come, let's pull the plug and return to Fibber McGee and Molly.

Yet, the saddest thing about "The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo" is that it mirrors the preponderance of today's TV comedies — thick, cloddish, written for Mortimer Snerds.

The premiere on NBC made it acutely obvious, moreover, that NBC is so depleted of comedies that even its comedies aren't comedies. You watch silently, staring blankly in disbelief.

Viewers of that extravaganza "BJ and the Bear" may recall Claude Akins' four appearances as Lobo on that series (which many suppose is written by Bear, who is a chimp). Lobo was a convincing sheriff who drove BJ up a wall, and his reward has been a spinoff series of his own.

You learn the result Tuesday in an episode called "The Day the Shark Ate Lobo," a title that does not make much sense, and hence a perfect choice for the hour.

The plot is cerebral and complex, so put on those thinking caps: Escaped bank robber Dandy Jim Brody (Christopher George) returns to the spot where he buried his $2 million loot only to discover that it has since been covered by a lagoon where Lobo is planning a fishing contest to bilk fishermen out of their money.

Dandy cleverly slips a shark into the lagoon to frighten off the fishermen, and Lobo and his imbecilic Deputy Perkins (Mills Watson) confuse it with a mechanical shark. Where would Dandy get a real shark on such short notice? Probably picked it up at the nearest shark store.

The fun doesn't end there, as you can imagine, as Lobo and the stupid Perkins try to reach shore with the real shark in pursit. I don't know about you, but I kept hoping they wouldn't make it.

"A TRIUMPH!" Alan Alda is brilliant: tough and vulnerable and true. And if there is such a thing as a world-class actress it is Meryl Streep who gives a gorgeous performance." — GENE SHALIT, TODAY, NBC-TV
"ENGROSSING... Alan Alda's Joe Tynan is a warm, sensitive, intelligent character. Meryl Streep is more stunning with each new appearance on the screen." — JANET MASLIN, NEW YORK TIMES
"A BRAVE, INTELLIGENT, BRILLIANTLY CRAFTED FILM AS CONTEMPORARY AS TODAY'S HEADLINES. Alan Alda has always been a first-rate actor and now he emerges as a first-rate writer as well, with a finger on the pulse of our very nervous system. The acting is of the highest calibre... 'THE SEDUCTION OF JOE TYNAN' SPEAKS LOUD AND CLEAR... IT IS EVERYTHING YOU WOULD WANT FROM A MOVIE." — REX REED, NEW YORK DAILY NEWS
"AN INTIMATE, TOUCHING AND DEEPLY SUBJECTIVE PORTRAIT OF A MAN CORRUPTED BY POWER. Alan Alda's solid performance is nearly upstaged by his sensitive writing of damned good parts for women. Meryl Streep has the best role of her career so far. Barbara Harris also rates ovations as Tynan's wife. Much credit for the film's emotional impact goes to director Jerry Schatzberg." — BRUCE WILLIAMSON, PLAYBOY MAGAZINE
"INTELLIGENT, BEAUTIFULLY ACTED FILM. Alan Alda's breakthrough — And two of the most stunning performances of the year by Barbara Harris and Meryl Streep." — DAVID ANSEN, NEWSWEEK
"WILL DEFINITELY BE OSCAR-NOMINATED IN ALL CATEGORIES." — STEPHEN SABAN, THE SOHO NEWS ★★★½★
"AN UNUSUALLY FINE FILM... FULL OF HUMAN COMPASSION AND HONEST EMOTIONS. A remarkably astute script which captures the Washington political scene to perfection. Truly remarkable performances. Meryl Streep simply lights up the screen." — KATHLEEN CARROLL, DAILY NEWS
"A BEAUTIFUL FILM... full of human complexities... and happily, the superb cast brings out these complexities beautifully. Alan Alda is extremely appealing and believable. Barbara Harris gives one of her best performances as his troubled wife. Meryl Streep is wonderful as Tynan's calculating, but winning mistress. It is a funny, moving, troubling, exciting look at American politics." — HOWARD KISSEL, WOMEN'S WEAR DAILY
"IT IS ALAN ALDA'S BREAKTHROUGH ROLE... he gives a movie performance that captures the brittle tenderness of his work on TV's M*A*S*H. His senator is self-critical, unpretentious and witty. Barbara Harris reflects her wonderful daftness through a spectrum of conflicting emotions. Meryl Streep in her first comic screen role, is at once a canny politico, a blithe belle and an uninhibited sexual partner. Like Katharine Hepburn, she uses her regal beauty and bearing to make her sudden descents to earth all the more exciting... For once, a movie love triangle features two strong heroines and credible, erotic bedroom scenes." — FRANK RICH, TIME MAGAZINE
"RUSH OFF TO SEE 'THE SEDUCTION OF JOE TYNAN', a sparkling entertainment about adult men and women. At the very least, both Meryl Streep and Barbara Harris deserve Oscar consideration. I could go on and on about Streep and Harris, but I must give full credit to Alan Alda for writing good women's roles, and for acting opposite them in a supportive manner that enhanced their emotional entrechats." — ANDREW SARRIS.

Black TV actors must attract white viewers

Scott's World
By Vernon Scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — James Earl Jones and Lou Gossett will carry more than their individual responsibilities as actors this fall when they star in a pair of dramatic TV series.

Both men are superlative actors. Both are black. Jones portrays a detective captain in "Paris" (CBS). Gossett plays a doctor in "The Lazarus Syndrome" (ABC).

Until this season black performers have not fared successfully in dramatic shows. Comedy, yes. (i.e. "Good Times," "The Jeffersons," "Sanford and Son")

Jones and Gossett share a common attitude toward their hour-long series — to convince viewers that the color of the skins needn't affect the scripts. Jones is a cop who happens to be black. Gossett is a doctor who happens to be black.

There are plenty of black cops and doctors in the United States whose pigmentation in no way affects their professional skills — unlike black actors who, for the most part, find themselves on the outside looking in.

Television attempted to work black dramatic stars into the programming mainstream with "Tenafly" and "Shaft" in past years. But the supermen characters strained credulity.

Doubtless, Jones and Gossett will capture black viewers anxious to see members of their own race in dignified roles playing believable, non-comedic characters.

But in order to garner high ratings, and thus remain on the air for more than a season, "Paris" and "The Lazarus Syndrome" must attract millions of white viewers, a fact of life Jones and Gossett appreciate fully.

Jones, a heavy-set, moon-faced man with an engaging grin, gained fame on Broadway in "The Great White Hope," winning an Oscar nomination for his performance in the movie version.

His performance in the documentary "Beyond The Blues" won an Emmy in 1965.

He also distinguished himself in "Claudine" and "The River Niger." He is one of the few notable black actors who did not appear in either "Roots" nor its sequel.

Jones lumbered into his dressing room on a sweltering afternoon recently and dropped into a chair with a sigh.

"I just came in from looking at the rushes of our show," he said. "I know very little about television acting. My work has been on the stage and in movies, so this is all pretty new to me. (This despite a stint in the soap opera "As The World Turns")

"So I go to the dailies (scenes shot the previous day) to see what I'm doing wrong and to study what I'm doing right.

"I haven't done a movie that I was entirely satisfied with. Not until I made the pilot film for this series. For the first time I didn't mind the work I'd done. I've never been able to say that before.

"This series is important to me. Maybe vital. It means more than just succeeding as an actor.

"When I was growing up on a farm in Manistee (Michigan), I went to a lot of movies. The biggest problem for me as an audience was watching stories that weren't relevant to my life.

"How could a black farm boy relate to Duke Wayne shooting Indians? The white audience must feel the same way about black drama.

"It's incumbent on me to make my role as Woody Paris believable and understandable to everyone who tunes in. Viewers have to care and feel for the man as a cop, no matter what his color.

"There will be no point made of the fact that Paris is black unless it is pertinent to the story."

Jones believes Woody Paris isn't all that different from such Caucasian cops as "Kojak," "Columbo" or "Baretta."

A TV holdout because he was concerned with the quality of scripts and the time limitations involved in a weekly series, Jones let it be known three or four years ago he was available for a limited series along the lines of "Columbo."

But the networks moved away from multiple limited series with individual segments airing every third or fourth week.

"Last year I gave the okay to a weekly series, not knowing if I had the stamina for it," Jones said, grinning.

"I'm 48 years old and can't leap over tall buildings or get involved in a lot of foot races. The action is internal with very little hardware, shoot-outs and auto chases.

"I have to be more credible than dodging bullets like James Bond. Paris isn't a black saint. He's a realist who doesn't involve himself in racial issues. He's obsessed with justice.

"I believe all races can relate to such a man. And I'm doing my best to make him the sort of man the entire spectrum of viewers can appreciate."

Builder hires students as animators

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — On makeshift walls in the back of a construction hut, tiny animal characters drawn in pencil and ink on small pieces of paper are waiting for their creators to put them on film and bring them to life.

The creators, four students of animated film from Sheridan College in Oakville, Ont., can be found huddled over drawing pads and bent over a camera on a tiny working table.

The students were hired by Bill Smith, owner of a small construction firm, to put together a 15-minute film. He invested $25,000 in the venture because he has always been interested in animation, and he decided to become actively involved after seeing a group of animators discuss their art on a television show.

Smith went to Sheridan College where he recruited the four students. Two of them intend to work with Smith on a planned 30-minute animated Christmas special.

The success of that venture, however, will ultimately depend on the success of the film now being produced in the back of the construction hut. He intends to approach the CBC with it.

Once the idea is formed a story board of rough sketches is made up. It is a visualization of the plot and is "one way of telling if the story is going to work." A second, more elaborate story board is constructed which maps out the film shot by shot.

The individual drawings are then photographed with a stop-action camera, putting one drawing on an individual frame of film. The result is a kind of rough draft of what the film will eventually look like.

A soundtrack and background are then added to the film, which is transferred on to clear sheets of acetate cells. Coloring is added to the cells which are sent away for a final filming.

Besides the four Sheridan students, Smith has hired on contract a number of cell painters, bringing to 14 the number of persons working on the film.

Death plane pilot warned

"He just headed straight into the fog and kept going."

Don McGillivray, president of the airline said today Crandall, a seven-year veteran pilot with the firm, had been advised there was fog in the area but that it would likely burn off by noon.

McGillivray said, however, Campbell River radio reported later in the morning that the fog wouldn't clear until about 2 p.m.

But he did not know if Crandall was made aware of the time change.

Smith, Olney and Mathison were working on board the fishing vessel Western Monarch when they spotted the plane come in low over the water.

Smith said the plane disappeared into the shroud-like fog and started to climb. A minute later they heard it crash.

The Coast Guard vessel Narwhal was cruising nearby. Its crew saw the crash on their radar set and pinpointed the location.

Five fishing vessels including the Western Monarch, Cape Canso, Cape Lazo, Robert II, Whiskey 10, and the two Coast Guard cutters Narwhal and Rider raced to the area.

Smith said it took him and his two companions nearly two hours to fight their way over the rocky, densely-bushed terrain.

The rescue operation involved about two dozen persons from the various boats and a nearby logging camp which sent a team of paramedics.

Two helicopters chartered in Port Hardy, an RCMP helicopter and another out of the U.S. Coast Guard station at Whidby Island were dispatched. But weather conditions made it impossible for the helicopters to get to the crash scene.

Three of the survivors had to be brought out by stretcher, an operation that took about five hours, Smith said. One of the survivors walked out.

When they finally reached the beach as night was falling, the survivors were airlifted to hospitals in Port Hardy and Port McNeill and then transferred to Vancouver at 8 p.m.

Victoria pilot Jim Gillespie said today the crash points out a deficiency in weather reporting for pilots on the west coast.

"I think a major cause of this accident is simply the government's failure to provide enough weather stations giving out reports that pilots can rely on," he said.

Gillespie said most of the weather information in outlying areas is supplied by lighthouse keepers.

But they emphasize conditions for mariners, giving visibility reports but generally nothing on cloud ceiling.

He said that because of the lack of aviation weather stations "people are starting to lose confidence in safely flying on the coast.

"We have the worst safety record in the world here, and nobody seems to be doing anything about it."

McGillivray agreed weather information is inadequate.

"It's a big problem. But whether the fog was the cause of this crash we won't know until the accident investigators complete their investigation."

The investigation, which began today, was hampered this morning by thick fog which prevented Ministry of Transport officials from reaching the scene.

The crash was the second for Pacific Coast Airlines this year. Six persons were killed April 19 when another twin-engine plane crashed on take-off at Cassidy airport near Nanaimo. An inquest is set to begin Nov. 5.

RJH chairman urged to quit

annual general meeting of the hospital society, when Prentice's term is up.

"Prentice has self destructed before my very eyes," says Bunn.

"By his rash public statements he's destroyed his effectiveness within every facet of the hospital."

Bunn charged that the budget was forwarded to the government without adequate discussion.

"There hasn't been any detailed discussion of the budget. It's the public's business. It is up to the board of directors to look at every department carefully. This hasn't been done."

Bunn said even the finance committee did not spend enough time on the budget.

McClelland, meanwhile, said the matter is strictly out of his hands.

But he gave Prentice a firm vote of confidence while chiding the doctors for their actions.

"In think Terry has done a tremendous job at the Royal Jubilee, especially in the last couple of months when there have been changes in the whole structure of the hospital.

McClelland noted that he and Prentice have had some royal battles over the last few months, especially over financing but said Prentice always stuck to his guns.

The health minister said, however, the medical staff, "might well look to themselves at the way they've handled the situation.

"It seems to me they're developing a habit of running to the press before going to their own board," McClelland said.

But Dr. Powell defended the doctors' action in going public, saying they believe this is the only way they can get any results.

McClelland said the doctors have a responsibility to deal with the board and it has the ultimate responsibility for the operation of the hospital.

While some doctors might not like tht situation and want it changed, McClelland said that's not going to happen in the near future.

Prentice is in England on a holiday and is not expected back in time for the Sept. 27 board meeting at which the medical staff will make their complaints.

Tories fire Mackasey

He added, however, that he still has a seven-year contract with the airline — the length of the appointment that he received from the previous Liberal government last December.

Mackasey said he was counting on serving a full seven years.

"I thought it was a challenging job, and I've enjoyed it. Frankly, I really felt secure.

"I'll tell you one thing," he continued. "As long as I was chairman of Air Canada, the headquarters would remain in Montreal.

"A lot of people would like to see it (the headquarters) moved out," Mackasey said, without identifying the persons who favor a move.

Although "it became obvious that I was a target for no other reason than that I was a Liberal . . . I feel no malice toward anybody."

Questioned on his future plans, Mackasey said "I've had some pretty exciting opportunities suggested. In any case, I don't intend to hide behind a tree somewhere."

Mackasey was fired as chairman of Air Canada Tuesday, a victim of the new Tory government's determination to rid top government posts of holdovers from the previous Liberal administration.

News of Mackasey's dismissal and the appointment of former chairman Pierre Taschereau as a temporary replacement came in a terse statement from Transport Minister Don Mazankowski's office, but it appeared the ex-Liberal cabinet minister's fate had been sealed well in advance.

With the transport minister present at a special meeting of airline directors here Tuesday, Mackasey fought to stay in the $90,000-a-year post. Throughout the day, he staunchly maintained that his job was not in jeopardy.

Mazankowski's statement said the board members "unanimously concurred with the action taken."

BEACH BRIGADE at lunch. Mount Doug Grade 11 students Pippa Coy, Janet Wonnenberg, Gordon Diamond, Joe Babity, and Lesley Bailey taste a hot meal cooked in a hobo can. It's all part of class on learning how to survive in the wilderness.

Education feast from hobo can

By JANE COVERNTON

There are 31 of them down on the beach cooking vegetarian spaghetti, cous-cous, and Chinese vegetables over hobo cans.

This is school?

Each group of three or four has cut holes in a paint can, lit a fire in it and is happily cooking a hot lunch.

"My boyfriend is bringing the meat because my sister ate mine."

"We've got raspberries and yogurt for dessert and a book to read."

The voices rise across the beach, as Bill Conconi moves from group to group, checking progress.

Yes, it really is school and Conconi is the teacher.

He started the outdoor education course at Mount Doug six years ago and since then more than 1,000 students have taken it.

Just what are they learning?

"The general purpose is to have a number of different experiences. It's back to the basics. With the trend towards more outdoor recreation, they have to become aware of safety and survival in the wilderness," says Conconi.

In the second part, the students in turn teach these skills at various elementary schools in the area.

Still later, the students act as counsellors when the elementary school kids go to week-long camps.

It all sounds like fun, but what ever happened to reading, writing, and 'rithmatic?

Says Conconi: "The standards are there and the expectations. They use reading and writing skills when they prepare their term papers."

The students have to research and learn an old skill like making shakes or Indian carvings.

Then they have to find someone to teach them the skill and interview the old-timer.

"Okay," says Conconi.

Brainwashed! That's what we are, says German-born Anna Schmidt of Victoria. We're brainwashed into believing that everything the medical profession says is right and that we have to go along with it.

One sentence in a desperate letter from her dying daughter-in-law in Wiesbaden, West Germany, mirrors the problem perfectly, Anna says.

When writing of some of the many treatments she had to endure during a two-year battle with cancer that she lost on April 5 this year, a day before her 37th birthday, Marlies Schmidt said plaintively:

"It was a horror, believe me! But what else could I do?"

That is what Anna means when she says everyone is brainwashed.

"Marlies gave in to all the treatment — the X-rays, the injections, the pills, the transfusions, the cobalt and the operations — without any objection," her mother-in-law explains. "And for what? To live two more years in pain when they knew she was going to die anyway."

Hodgkins Disease, which is what Marlies had, is known as a relatively painless form of cancer, Anna says. Marlies had already had the disease for some time without knowing it when it was diagnosed but the pain didn't start until she was inflicted with the treatment. It wasn't until then that she had high temperatures, sudden weight loss and many other even worse side effects.

During her two-year medical battle, Marlies Schmidt was in hospital most of the time but in a bizarre kind of experimental game was continually shuttled from institution to institution for something different to be tried.

Her spleen was removed. As well as weight, she lost all her hair and the feeling in her fingers and toes, was unable to eat and, and because she was so weak she fell and broke her right ankle.

Yet to her the worst thing of all was a severe case of homesickness she developed after being taken to a cancer clinic in the Black Forest many miles from her hometown. She nearly died from that before her husband Peter put his foot down and demanded she be returned to the local hospital in Wiesbaden.

Like a great many who suffer from this dreaded disease, Marlies Schmidt's case is a sad one. She either didn't understand her condition completely or couldn't accept it and quite near the end of her ordeal was still writing things like: "It will be a long time until everything returns to normal . . ."

She worried more about her husband and her two young boys than about herself and said in her letters to her mother-in-law: "I am looking forward to when I'll be back and my three sweeties will be with me again, allowed to visit me every day." And she thought of herself as a burden. "Peter has had a hard time — work, household duties and the trouble with me," she said.

Doctors believe cure is a possibility if Hodgkins Disease (which is cancer of the lymph nodes) is caught in the early stages, hence the need for all the tests. When undiscovered or found too late, it is fatal.

With such an obviously terminal case, wouldn't this woman have been better off at home with her husband and children? Who's to say, she may even have lived the two years, and much more peacefully. But even if she hadn't, wouldn't it still have been more desirable for her to spend the time she had left with her family and die in dignity?

"Precisely!" says Anna Schmidt. "They (the medical authorities) didn't prove that it was worthwile to go on and on and inflict this horrible torture to prolong a life. The trouble is, doctors can go to medical conventions and claim they kept her alive for two years. But then she isn't really alive; she's a vegetable."

Even though the fight had obviously been lost and Marlies Schmidt was admitted to hospital unconscious four days before she died, they still put her on all kinds of machines again, says Anna, instead of letting her die in peace.

But what is the answer? Saying 'No' may be harder than you think.

After Anna, who has lived in Canada for 23 years, received the letters from her daughter-in-law and heard of her ordeal from her son, she was determined the same thing wouldn't happen here to her.

"So I had a legal note drawn up stating that if I developed any kind of terminal illness I wanted to be left alone without any of these tortures," she explains.

But when she took the note along to her lawyer, Anna was told to forget it. It wasn't legal at all.

"I was informed that this letter was of no value whatsoever," she says bitterly. "It doesn't matter what you say, as soon as you get into the hospital they can do whatever they want to."

Angered by this, Anna wrote to an American-based organization called the Society for the Right to Die. She found that it has enjoyed considerable success south of the border where several states have already enacted laws giving terminally ill patients the right to choose to die. And Anna hopes to stimulate "a few people who have influence" here to introduce something similar.

"It's basically our democratic right to be allowed to make the choice," she points out. "Yet the system goes against that.

"What kind of a free country is this when you don't have a right to say 'No! I don't want to be treated.'?"

Ferry artillery turns on armchair admirals

A B.C. Ferries Corp. spokesman today criticized the armchair admirals who are blaming the corporation for a sharp decline in Victoria's tourist business in mid-August.

Bill Bouchard admitted that traffic on the Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay run was down last month but disagreed with the local tourist operators' diagnosis that threats of ferry shutdowns were primarily to blame.

Ed Higgin said there should be a news blackout on contract talks. He also condemned the corporation for alerting the public early in August to possible cancelled sailings because a strike threatened to cut off fuel supplies.

But Bouchard said today it is the corporation's duty to give advance warning of possible interruptions.

"It's our responsibility to get the message out. We shouldn't hide back and wait for something to happen," he said.

"In August, there were three things that you couldn't hide very easily or wouldn't want to. It's difficult to camouflage the Alberni on the rocks in Active Pass."

A check of traffic figures for August suggests the removal of the Queen of Alberni after the Aug. 9 grounding as the principal reason traffic was down on the ferries, Bouchard said.

Just as many passengers and vehicles are coming to Vancouver Island, but more of them are taking the northern Horsehoe Bay-Nanaimo route.

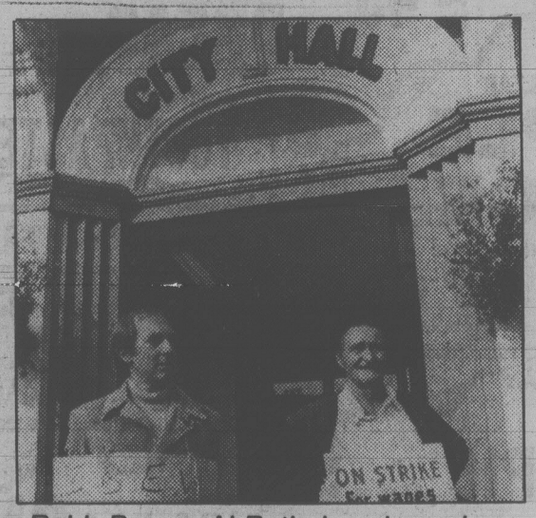

Tourist traffic alone on the southern route is up significantly. Alberta vehicles travelling from Tsawwassen were up eight per cent in August over the same month last year, and other Canadian vehicles increased 19 per cent. Washington vehicles jumped eight per cent.

California and other U.S. cars were down 47 per cent — but you can't blame that on threats of ferry service cuts, Bouchard said.

"That's been the pattern all summer with the gas crunch down there."

It's the British Columbians who aren't travelling the southern route. The August count of B.C. licence plates at Tsawwassen was down five per cent, while it was up 15 per cent on the northern route.

Bouchard also wondered what more the government or corporation could do to make the contract negotiation process any smoother. The ferries are already under the double threat of the Railway and Ferries Bargaining Assistance Act of 1976 and the Essential Services Disputes Act. The second provides for a 90-day cooling-off period during which work must be resumed, if there is a substantial threat to life and safety or the economic welfare of B.C.

Robb Brown, Al Rutledge showed . . .

City Hall hobbled

Business was not as usual at city hall today as the municipal office on Douglas Street was hit by an electrical workers picket line.

City inside workers refused to cross the line after meeting for about an hour to discuss the matter.

It was the first time the disruptive tactics of the city electricians have involved the inside workers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 388.

Local president Rick Doyle said about 90 per cent of the 80 city hall employees present at the meeting voted not to cross the line.

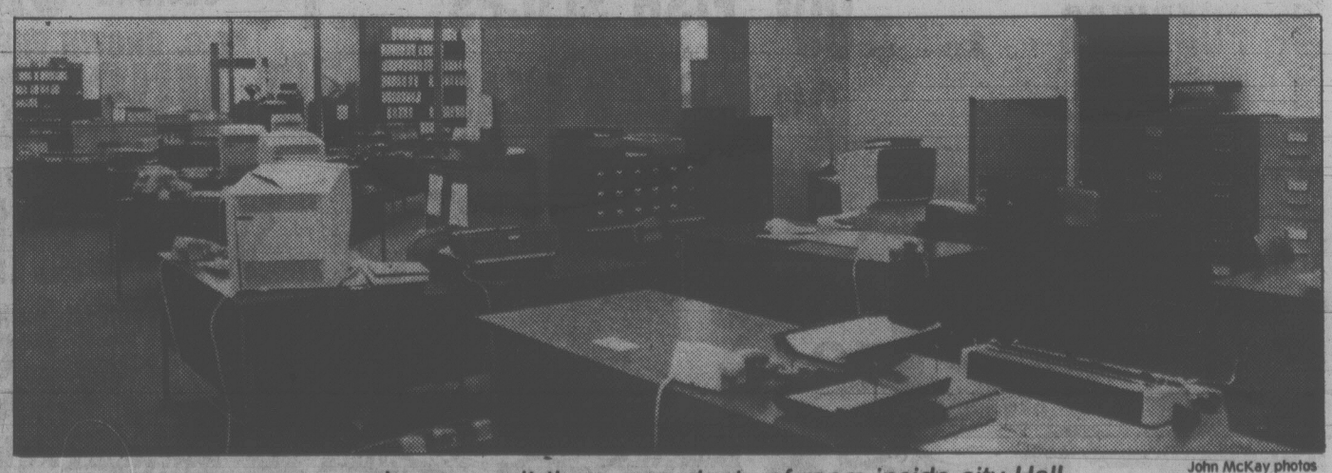

He said the members want a meeting with the striking electrical workers "to express their concerns about the picketing and tell them the feelings of the local."

The 15 striking members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers began last week picketing various city job sites, usually for short periods of time.

Prior to today, the pickets had been roving between garbage collection sites and a number of road and sidewalk maintenance jobs, work being done by the city outside workers, members of CUPE Local 50.

Some outside workers were off the job today as well, as the IBEW set up pickets at the Beacon Hill park public works yard.

One union source said today that although both sides have said a union demand for immediate wage parity with B.C. Hydro workers is the main issue, the real problem is the electrical workers' desire to improve fringe benefits such as holidays and hours of work.

. . . and as a result there was plenty of room inside city Hall

Before the judge

One of two 17-year-olds charged with breaking into the Capital Regional Board offices at 1002 Wharf Street was given a 15-month jail term by Judge Blake Allan in provincial court Tuesday.

Anthony William Adamson of Mill Bay pleaded guilty to one of two breaking and entering counts while Anthony Lee Edwards, no fixed address, elected trial by judge without jury.

Adamson also pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property in a separate incident.

He said the culprits ransacked desks and went into the Bastion Theatre Society offices in the same building where $626.51 was taken. Adamson's thumbprint was found on a piece of fibreglass.

Laughton also said one of the persons defecated in the middle of the floor.

On the possession charge, court was told Victoria police were called Sept. 3 about youths trying to sell rings.

When police arrived at the Maple Leaf Restaurant, 1213 Douglas, they saw five youths in a booth. Two diamond rings, valued at $1,000, were found on one of three young women in the group. She told officers Adamson handed her the rings when police walked in, saying, "The police are here, hang on to these for me."

Adamson denied any knowledge of the rings, despite the woman's statement, Laughton said.

Duty legal aid lawyer Brian MacKenzie said Adamson bought the rings in the downtown area earlier the same day for $20.

Allan imposed the 15-month term for the break-in and a concurrent, 12-month term for the possession of the rings. He also recommended that Adamson's time be served in a forestry camp setting.

After being denied bail, Tyson pleaded guilty to two counts of theft under $200, and one count each of failing to appear in court for a trial and breach of probation.

Laughton said Tyson was employed by the Meat Market Steakhouse, 535 Yates, on Feb. 1 and, on his first day at work, took an envelope containing $137.60.

The next day, he went to an employees' change room and took a wallet containing $43 from another employee, Jeff Beckmeyer.

The failure to show up for a trial was in connection with the theft charges, to which he originally pleaded not guilty.

The breach of probation count concerned a probation order made Aug. 1 this year by Judge Fred Green on another conviction. Tyson reported initially to his probation officer as ordered but did not return as directed.

Laughton said Tyson had a juvenile record which included convictions for theft, possession of a prohibited weapon, possession of stolen property, failing to remain at the scene of an accident, breaking and entering, and setting a false fire alarm.

Defence lawyer Barry Mah Ming said a psychiatric report on Tyson stated the youth knew it was wrong to lie and steal but couldn't stop himself.

Allan handed out consecutive, 60-day sentence on the theft charges and consecutive, 10-day terms on the other two charges.

Report to LAB on Royal Oak Inn

Saanich police will file a report with the Liquor Administration Board on under-aged drinkers at the Royal Oak Inn.

Chief Bob Peterson refused Tuesday to reveal what recommendations will be made.

Peterson said he is concerned by what appears to have been an upsurge in under-aged drinking at the beer parlor.

The chief said patrols will be stepped up.

His comments came after Saanich council Monday night deferred a public works recommendation that sewer service be provided for a 60-room expansion at the hotel.

Reports after the meeting indicated aldermen were concerned that a 16-year-old boy, charged with criminal negligence in connection with a hit-and-run accident last week that left a 14-year-old Saanich girl severely injured, may have been drinking at the inn.

Peterson said officers went to the pub after the accident and found a number of under-aged persons.

But hotel co-owner Joseph Isherwood said he is positive the boy was not served and has been unable to determine from police whether the young persons ejected were drinking or simply on the premises.

Kevin John Case, 24, was found guilty Tuesday by a county court jury of stealing a transceiver Jan. 25, 1978, from Queale Electronics Ltd., 1004 North Park.

He was remanded by Judge Peter Millward until Tuesday for sentence.

The jury deliberated 70 minutes before asking for an extensive readback of evidence from two witnesses. After that, it took three minutes to reach a verdict.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the jury the important issue was identification and said 11 items in the evidence, taken together, amounted to proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the thief was Case.

After the jury's verdict, Mulligan told Judge Millward the stolen item was not recovered. Case, he said, has a 1978 conviction for theft for which he was fined $100 and a 1976 offence for failure to appear in court.

Case will remain at large on a recognizance in the amount of $1,000 pending sentence.

Position paper on regions coming soon: Vander Zalm

BY PAUL NICHOLSON

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm's long-awaited position paper on the future of the regional level of government will be released within the next couple of weeks.

In an interview Tuesday, the minister admitted the problems surrounding regional districts are not nearly as simple as they appeared in the beginning.

Soon after taking over municipal affairs last December, Vander Zalm criticized regional governments and said he intended to look into their operation with a view to restricting their powers or even abolishing them.

Since that time, however, he's been under pressure to modify his stand and now plans a lengthy tour of the province visiting municipalities and regional district headquarters.

While on the tour, he will be expecting feedback from local officials on the position paper that will be made public before he goes.

The paper will contain a number of proposals designed to solve problems involved with the regional level of government and the overlapping jurisdictions they have created.

Vander Zalm declined to comment further on the options in his position paper, saying only: "We want solutions that will not only benefit the people, but which are workable."

If all goes according to schedule, new legislation covering district government will be introduced at the spring session of the legislature, the minister said.

Asked if the abolition of regional governments is still a strong possibility (he once gave them only a 50-50 chance of surviving his axe), Vander Zalm said he has to wait to see what input he gets from his provincial tour.

Regional districts were set up in the mid-1960s to provide planning for all municipal projects which crossed municipal boundaries, such as sewers, water systems, roads and recreation facilities.

But some critics have suggested they've gained too much power and effectively created a fourth level of government, compounding confusion about overlapping jurisdictions.

Algeria vet dies at 81

PARIS (Reuter) — Gen. Andre Zeller, one of four leaders of an aborted military coup aimed at keeping Algeria a French colony, has died, his family said Tuesday. He was 81. Zeller received a 15-year jail term for his role in Algeria but was paroled in 1968.

Pop them in salads. Pack them in lunches. Put them in pies. Enjoy them fresh from the fruit bowl. Sweet, juicy B.C. Blue Grapes are a zesty, refreshing change any way—any time.

They're delicious in home-made jams and jellies, too. So plan to serve their special fresh-fruit goodness all year long. Here are two simple recipes to get you started. Enjoy.

GRAPE JAM

	METRIC
5 cups prepared fruit (about 3-1/2 lbs (1.5 kg) ripe grapes)	1.25 l
7-1/2 cups granulated sugar	1.75 l
1/2 bottle (Certo) liquid fruit pectin

Slip skins from grapes; add 1/2 cup water to pulp in large saucepan. Bring to boil; simmer, covered, for 5 minutes. Sieve to remove seeds. Chop or grind skins; add to pulp. Measure 5 cups (1.25 L) fruit into large saucepan; add sugar; mix well. Bring to a full rolling boil over high heat; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. At once, stir in liquid fruit pectin; skim off foam. Stir and skim for 5 minutes; ladle into hot, sterilized glasses. Cover at once with 1/8 inch (0.3 cm) hot paraffin. Yields about 12 medium glasses.

FREEZER GRAPE JELLY

	METRIC
3 cups prepared juice (about 3 lbs (1.3 kg) ripe grapes)	675 ml
5-1/4 cups granulated sugar	1.25 L
3/4 cup water	175 ml
1 box (Certo) powdered fruit pectin

Prepare the juice by thoroughly crushing the grapes, one layer at a time. Place in jelly cloth or bag; squeeze out juice. Measure 3 cups (675 ml) juice into large bowl; add sugar; mix well. Combine water and powdered fruit pectin in small saucepan; bring to boil; boil 1 minute, stirring constantly; stir into fruit juice. Continue stirring for about 3 minutes. (There will be a few remaining sugar crystals). Pour quickly into glasses; cover with tight lids. Let stand at room temperature, until set, about 24 hours. Store in freezer. If jelly is to be used within 3 weeks, it can be stored in refrigerator. Yields about 8 medium glasses.

B.C. BLUE GRAPES
Enjoy them fresh now.
Serve them as jams & jellies all year long.

O'BRIEN RULES CLIPPERS MUST PAY RECORD COMPENSATION FOR STAR CENTRE

Don't think it was fair, says Walton

SAN DIEGO (AP) — "I have this empty feeling in my stomach," said Bill Walton, rocked by the stiffest compensation award in pro sports history.

"I don't think it was fair," Walton said after San Diego Clipper team-mates Kermit Washington, Kevin Kunnert, Randy Smith and a 1980 first-round draft pick were awarded to Portland Trail Blazers on Tuesday.

Ending a two-month tug-of-war, National Basketball Association commissioner Lawrence O'Brien ruled that Washington, one of the league's prized power forwards, and Kunnert, a 7-foot reserve centre, must go to Portland as payment for the loss of Walton.

The 6-foot-11, all-pro centre played out his option with the Trail Blazers and signed with the Clippers May 12, reportedly for the largest sports salary ever — a five-year contract calling for $900,000 per year.

If the year-old Clippers choose to keep Smith, a starting guard who averaged 18 points per game last year, they must pay Portland $350,000 and their 1982 first-round draft choice.

"It's a real setback," said Walton. "We were very close to a championship team. Indirectly, I'm somewhat responsible for that."

Walton's "durability" was the central question, O'Brien said. He said he took into account that Walton's contract "reflects a clear recognition by both San Diego and Walton that his past medical history created legitimate concerns about his ability to fully perform in the future."

After signing as the NBA's top draft choice of 1974, Walton, 26, was sidelined for half of the Trail Blazers' games. He sat out all of the 1977-78 season with a stress fracture in his foot, a year after winning MVP honors for leading Portland to the NBA championship.

"If Walton in his first five years had proven as durable as (Wilt) Chamberlain, (Bill) Russell and (Kareem) Abdul-Jabbar, it would be virtually impossible to calculate his value or to compensate Portland for his lose," said O'Brien, after reviewing written submissions and testimony from the two clubs.

O'Brien noted that Walton's contract with the Clippers included "unique terms for salary reductions in the event he is unable to play a specified number of games."

"Therefore," ruled O'Brien, "I do not agree with Portland's arguments that San Diego's contractual agreement to Walton demonstrates that his 'durability' is no longer a risk and that his value must be judged solely on the basis of his skills."

After the announcement, Portland owner Larry Weinberg said he "didn't believe the Trail Blazers were made whole" for the loss of Walton.

Clippers' owner Irv Levin said he called Weinberg and congratulated him.

"For what," asked Weinberg, according to Levin.

"For coming out smelling like a rose," said Levin.

Washington is 28, Kunnert 27 and Smith 30. Washington, in his sixth pro season, nearly surpassed his career high last year when he averaged 11.3 points per game. He led the club in rebounding with a 9.8 average.

Kunnert, who averaged 6.5 points and 7.0 rebounds, said he accepted the decision "philosophically.

"It had to happen," said the five-year veteran from the University of Iowa. "There's nothing you can do about it. I'll probably get a chance to play more at Portland."

Portland Coach Jack Ramsay said the addition of Washington and Kunnert "really solidifies our club."

Asked if he would prefer Smith or money and an additional draft choice, Ramsay said he personally favors Portland receiving the money.

Willie, rain delay chill Expos' fever

Times News Services

Willie Stargell and an evening downpour combined to put at least a temporary chill on Montreal Expos' pennant fever Tuesday night.

Expos managed to rally from the near three-hour rain delay in Montreal but there was nothing they could do about Stargell's mammoth two-run home run in the 11th inning that carried Pittsburgh to a 5-3 National League baseball victory.

The triumph gave Pittsburgh a two-game sweep of a showdown series with the Expos and increased its lead in the East Division to two games.

Stargell, who had placidly engaged in a game of cards to celebrate the Pirates' victory the previous night, was equally unmoved by his dramatic blow.

"If I hadn't done it, someone else would have," Stargell said of his 29th homer of the year. "That's the way we've been playing all year. When the game's on the line, we feel we can win it."

"We always think we're ahead even when we're even," said Tanner. "We've had games just as tough as this one and we've won them just as dramatically."

With three first-inning runs, the Pirates appeared to have made such heroics unnecessary.

Bill Robinson and Bill Madlock delivered run-scoring singles against starter Bill Lee and a pair of Montreal errors by centre fielder Andre Dawson and third baseman Larry Parrish helped to set up two of the runs.

But spurred by another near-sellout crowd of 56,976, the Expos rallied for two runs in the third on Lee's RBI double and a sacrifice fly by Warren Cromartie.

After the Expos failed to produce a run when they loaded the bases with one out in the fifth, the game was halted for two hours and 54 minutes by rain. Earlier in the inning, the contest was stopped for five minutes.

Once play resumed, Parrish smashed a single to centre, scoring Tony Perez, who had singled and was sacrificed to second, with the tying run.

The deadlock remained until pinch-hitter Mike Easler led off the 11th with a single and coasted home when Stargell connected against reliever Dale Murray.

While Tanner was elated by the blast, he singled out the work of four Pittsburgh relievers, including winner Grant Jackson, 8-4, who held the Expos at bay.

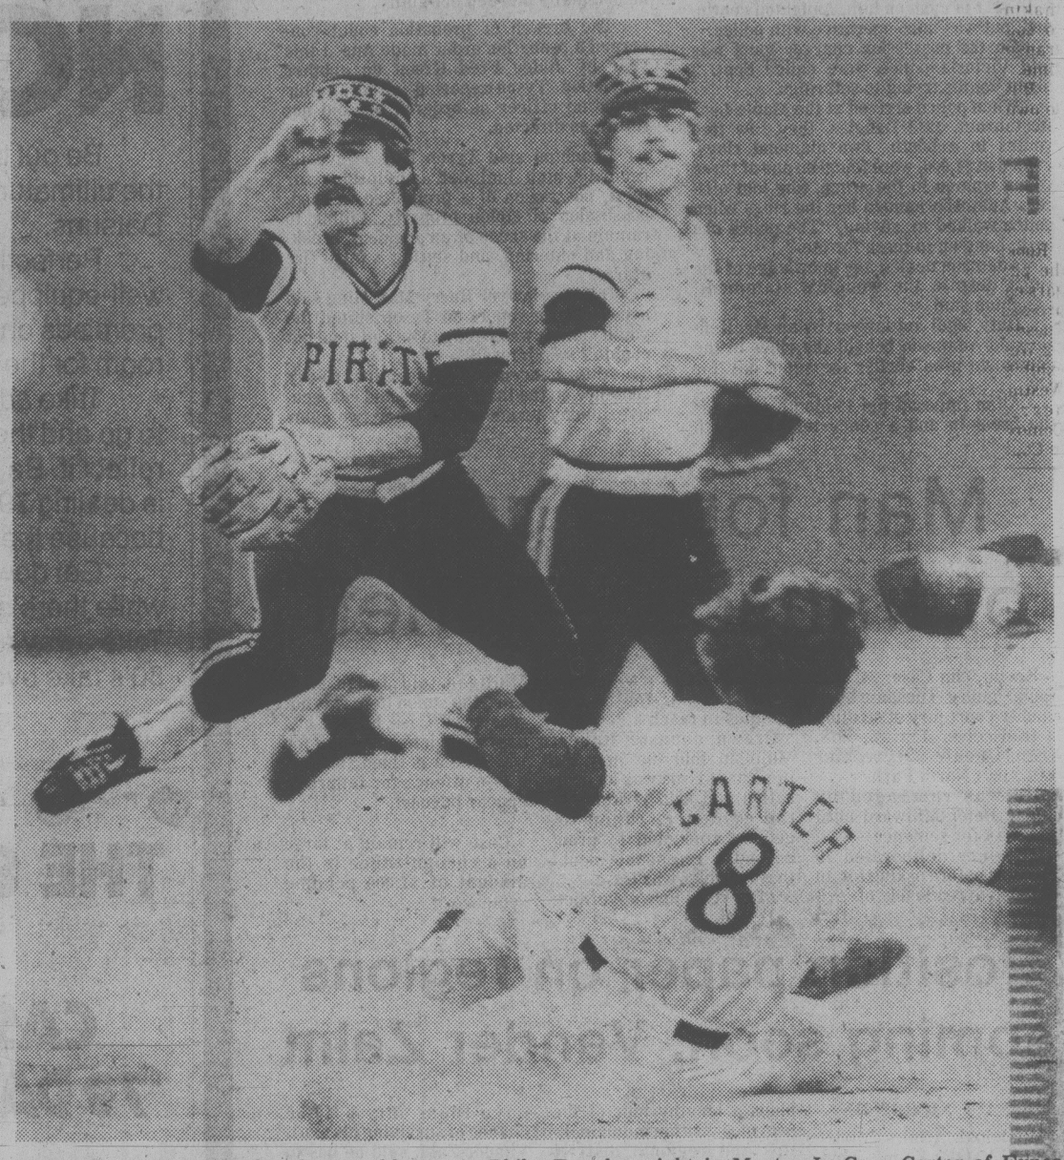

"Our bullpen has kept us where we are all year," he said. "They've been instrumental in 75 per cent of our victories."

Significantly, the Pirates pitching staff held the third through sixth-place batters to just three hits in 26 official trips to the plate in the two game series.

"It's been like that all year long," said Stargell. "Everyone feels they want to make an individual contribution to this ball club."

Another weekend, another national title. Eight days earlier the Shamrocks won the Mann Cup in lacrosse and now Victoria West is supreme in senior amateur soccer for a second time.

Before that this year there was Budgets' softball victory in the Pan-Am Games, under Canada's banner, of course. Too bad they missed a fifth Canadian crown. In the spring, Home Lumber won a national women's basketball title and this summer Goodwill Bottlers won the intermediate lacrosse title and a Saanich team won the national peewee boxla championship. To these people their victories are just as important as the senior triumphs.

Yes, the Victoria name has been front and foremost this year.

But now all hail the Wests.

It was patently obvious Wests were ready for this one. Coach Bob English had his club dead fit. He had put the club through a rigorous training grind and even had scheduled an earlier three-game series in three days just to let the players know what was in store for them.

They responded and the series plan worked. Beautifully. If the goals didn't come as they should have in earlier tournament matches when the Wests were the dominant force and outplayed their rivals by a goodly margin, they came in the final match when it mattered.

And they came because the club was patient enough to wait. That's discipline — a la the Whitecaps if you like, because that was their trademark — and Wests can be equally proud of their efforts.

Victoria too should be proud of its newest champions and its oldest sports organization.

Meanwhile, call off the rest of the Canadian Football League schedule and give the Grey Cup to the Eskimos.

That was a tremendous display of power by the Grey Cup champions over the B.C. Lions, Sunday. Sure, the Eskimos rubbed it in and why not? They needed the point spread in case the Lions reverse the decision the next time the clubs meet (Nov. 3) in Empire Stadium. Points break ties.

Coach Vic Rapp didn't like it but maybe he had a personal right to be annoyed. He knew in his own mind just how good the Eskimos were. After all, he had been there as an assistant coach when this powerhouse was being built. But when it came time to name a new head coach, Rapp didn't get the Edmonton job. Hugh Campbell did. Rapp came to B.C. which is another reason and a very good one why he obviously has no love now (or then) for the Eskimos.

And the fact the Esks had one of those big games that players dream of is perhaps what Rapp feared the most. Which is why it hurt so deeply.

Poor taste or good football to run up the score? It all depends where you sit. But in football, or in any sport, if you get the other guy down, jump on him and keep him there. That's a cardinal rule. The Eskimos this season have proven they can put points on the board against the best of CFL teams and likely will again.

Now the question is raised: Is this the best of all Edmonton teams? Better even than the Jackie Parker, Normie Kwong, Johnny Bright clubs of the 40s? The argument is wide open. Besides, most of these Eskimos have been to the Grey Cup final five times in the past six years and if this team isn't better than last year's the Lions aren't really prepared to argue the point.

Still, for the young Lions, it was a lesson in experience, well taught. They will learn from it. And not only from the offensive display of the Esks, but also from the defence. Because there was a time in the game when the Lions were first and five on the five and couldn't move the ball in three tries. They got a break with a penalty call against Edmonton and the ball on the 2½-yard line. Three tries later the ball was still there, but now the Eskimos had it.

Reason enough — to go with what the Eskimos were doing on offence — it seems in retrospect, why Rapp blew his stack and was escorted squirming from the field.

Rapp also said "the ground rules have been laid" for the clubs' next clash in Vancouver Nov. 3. "The wheel keeps turning and some day, some place, some time, things will change."

Maybe, but not likely, not this November. The Lions are a young team, coming on, but they need guidance not a player war. Really, what they have to do is move the ball, not keep giving it back to Edmonton.

Too bad the game won't be on TV.

TWO STEAK MEALS PER DAY

Gradin adding weight

Times News Services

Thomas Gradin is devouring steak twice a day at the Vancouver Canucks' training camp in Powell River in an attempt to strengthen his slender body for the rigorous 80-game National hockey League schedule.

Gradin scored 20 goals last season in his first year with the Canucks after leaving his native Sweden. The 23-year-old centre isn't frail, but he did weigh only 175 pounds when the Canucks were eliminated in the Stanley Cup playoffs in April.

"I will put on a few more pounds now that I'm back in Canada again," Gradin said Tuesday after a summer at home. "I'm eating steak once more.

"The food I'm accustomed to eating in Sweden isn't as fattening as the food here. That's why I'm now lighter (169).

"Steak in Sweden is twice as expensive and the quality isn't so good. In place of steak, we eat a lot of spaghetti, fish and potatoes."

Gradin's concern for more weight and strength may have something to do with his demand for a more lucrative contract. He's entering the option year of his NHL agreement.

He is one of the lowest-salaried of the Canucks and general manager Jake Milford admits he would like to sign the blue-chip commodity to a long-term deal.

Agent Bjorn Wagnusson of Sweden is scheduled to arrive in Vancouver next month to begin negotiations on behalf of Gradin and defenceman Lars Lindgren. They are the survivors of the four Swedes who attended training camp a year ago.

Gradin, who had 31 assists last season and scored four of Vancouver's nine playoff goals against Philadelphia Flyers in a three-game series, said the Canucks have offered him a three-year contract, but he would like more money.

Elsewhere, Hartford Whalers say they expect a decision from doctors later this week on whether 51-year-old veteran Gordie Howe will be able to play for the team when it makes its NHL debut this season.

Howe's chances of playing this season were called into question by team physician Dr. Vincent Turco who said Howe had been experiencing dizzy spells.

Turco said the dizzy spell may be related to an old head injury and futher tests would be required before he could give Howe approval to play this season.

A judge has ordered Edmonton Oilers to pay former team member Tim Sheehy $11,595 for having traded him three years ago without honoring a clause in his contract.

Sheehy, traded to the Oilers from New England Whalers in 1975 when both belonged to the World Hockey Association, sued the Edmonton club for not paying him $10,000 when he was traded to Birmingham Bulls in 1976.

At last, Reed finds happy home

WINNIPEG (CP) — It has taken Winnipeg Blue Bomber James Reed nearly two years and three cities to find a home where he is appreciated. Now, Reed is enjoying his first Canadian Football League season so much he wants to stick around for a few years.

The 225-pound, 6-1 middle linebacker was a junior college star at San Jose, Calif., where he earned a full scholarship to the University of California at Berkeley.

There, he played what he rates as two fair seasons before taking a shot at the pro ranks.

When he was not picked in the 1977 National Football League annual college draft, he went the free agent route, landing in Philadelphia and making the Eagles' roster for a season.

A year later, after a two-month training camp grind, Reed was one of the final Philadelphia cuts. Unsure where to turn next, he decided to take the year off.

"I wanted to rest my body for a while. I did some weight work, but mostly I just thought about my future."

Reed didn't have just his own future at heart then and he agreed to spend some time during his break from football, helping out at a San Jose area home for wayward boys.

"I talked with them about how you can combine football with schooling at college and told them what I could about professional football.

"But mostly we talked about attitude, about how sometimes things don't always go your way and how you have to keep trying."

After several months, he heard from Montreal Alouettes and was in Sherbrooke, Que., for training camp last June.

He says he was optimistic about his chances. But the Alouettes went out and netted U.S. college star Tom Cousineau, the first draft pick over-all by the NFL this year.

"It looked good there (Montreal)," says Reed. "I really figure I would have started for them if Cousineau hadn't come to Canada. It was the same old story. Every team I'd been with, I'd stay until the last cut."

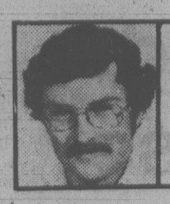

Winnipeg head coach Ray Jauch, and Earl Lunsford, the team's general manager, apparently agreed with Reed about his potential and took him in a deal for future considerations.

Reed was delighted because the move meant an opportunity to play and not just to fill a uniform during training camp.

As ever, Reed is confident. He's not even concerned about cold Manitoba autumns.

"Everybody's been telling me how cold it gets here," Reed says. "But I'm not worried. I'm going to get me some warm clothes. I just like to play football."

Higher gasoline prices changing rec vehicles

OUTDOORS
Stewart Lang

With gasoline prices now hovering around the $1 per gallon mark, there's bound to be serious changes in the whole outdoor recreation transportation field during the next few years.

We've been riding the gravy train too long and events are beginning to catch up to us.

Increasing wages will cushion the blow for a time, but eventually we'll have to change a few attitudes and habits if we want to continue enjoying outdoor experiences.

Detroit engineers are already in the process of downsizing pickups and four-wheel-drive vehicles.

Over the next few years there'll be a gradual change away from the heavy behemoths of the past by incorporating lighter materials, lower axle ratios, smaller engines, radial tires and diesel engines into model designs.

Most of the four-wheel-drive manufacturers are either switching right back to the part-time four-wheel-drive system or offering the full-time system as an option in an effort to gain better milage.

Some enterprising outfits in the United States are even making a business of manufacturing and selling kits to convert full-time transfer cases (the part behind the transmission that sends power to both axles) to part-time.

But, speaking as an owner of the full-time unit, you'd have to own the vehicle for a long time to justify the expense of buying and installing the kit and locking hubs.

American Motors is now introducing the Eagle, based on a Concord body and utilizing an entirely-new transfer case system, for the 1980 year and Subaru has been selling both a four-wheel-drive station wagen and the "Brat" in North America for several years.

In addition, several mini-pickup manufacturers are starting to offer four-wheel-drive versions of their products and Suzuki, mainly known in North America for motorcycle sales, has started to market a machine which resembles a scaled-down Je)ep CJ-5.

This Suzuki 4x4 has been marketed in Eastern Asia, South America, Australia and some Arabic countries for the past 10 years, weighs in at roughly 1,700 pounds and gets in the order of 35 mpg highway and 28 mpg off-road.

Most current four-wheel-drives get gas milage in the mid or low teens — providing they've been tuned up properly.

International Harvester also has a tiny 4x4 on the drawing boards.

Regular pickups and vans will incorporate the same types of fuel-saving components but will get even better milage than the four-by-fours because of their lighter weight.

A major problem is bound to surface when recreationists now hauling either a trailer or boat start looking for a new vehicle.

The big-block engines of the past will no longer be available and towing vehicles will be lighter. Obviously, something — probably a few creature comforts because of smaller trailers — will have to suffer.

And what about motor homes?

Right now manufacturers are searching around for more efficient gearing patterns and overdrive setups for the highway. Some are installing supercharged diesels which offer nearly the horsepower of an equivalent-sized gasoline engine as well as the longevity, relatively hassle-free performance and low operating costs of a diesel.

But as the finite petroleum resources gradually disappear, it's certain that both gasoline and diesel engines will go the way of the dodo.

Come to think of it, that inevitable demise might not be so bad if breakthroughs in other areas compensate.

Picture, if you will, a four-by-four or other type of recreational vehicle powered by a cool, quiet and efficient electric motor.

Badminton a pro sport

LONDON (Reuter) — The bookmakers' top two choices for the $6,900 men's singles prize seem unmoved by the monetary implications of professional badminton, which finally becomes a reality today when the Masters Tournament begins.

One says he is playing for the fun, the other is too old to care.

Morten Frost, the 21-year-old Danish champion, was named by London bookmakers yesterday as the 2-1 favourite to win the men's singles, while 34-year-old veteran Dave Svend Pri was the second choice at 9-4. Another Dane, world champion Flemming Delfs, was third at 7-2.

Frost said Tuesday: "Mainly, I play for fun. My ambition is to play badminton, not earn money, and the fact that there is now prize money does not make it any more fun.

"Obviously I would like to win the tournament, and if I can earn some money too, well, thats nice," The Copenhagen history student added.

Pri, the 1975 all-England champion who has been one of world's top players for a decade, is delighted by the coming of the professional game, though he feels he will not benefit much.

"I'm too old, my time is past for money badminton," he said Tuesday. "I was born an amateur and I'll die an amateur.

"If I was five years younger I would think differently."

Rookie leads Cougar win

Rookie Don Deschewes set the pace and Victoria Cougars came up with their best pre-season effort to date Tuesday while recording a 6-2 Western Hockey League exhibition victory over New Westminster Bruins before a near-capacity crowd at Comox Valley Sports Centre in Courtenay.

Cougars, who enjoyed period leads of 1-0 and 4-1, are now 2-1-1 in a seven-game series against the Bruins which continues tonight in Gold River, Thursday in Campbell River and concludes Friday at Mill Bay.

Torrie Robertson, David Wheeldon, Barry Pederson and Randy Zinn added singles for Victoria while Randy Wickware and Andy Ristau replied for Bruins.

Victoria took six of 10 minor penalties.

Cougars play a rookie squad from Vancouver Canucks of the National League on Sept. 27 at Memorial Arena and open league play Sept. 29 at Memorial against Bruins.

In other WHL exhibitions, visiting Portland Winter Hawks scored two goals in the third period to defeat Medicine Hat Tigers 4-3 and Regina Pats defeated Brandon Wheat Kings 3-1 in Brandon.

Will Reggie be tossed out of the Yankee house?

By WILL GRIMSBY

NEW YORK (AP) — As the world turns in baseball's most intriguing real life drama — New York Yankees' version of "Days of Our Lives" — questions whet the appetite, just as in an afternoon soap opera on TV.

When did the honeymoon began to fray at the seams? Who done Reggie in? Himself or some sinister outside forces? Will he find happiness elsewhere?

Tune in tomorrow and see.

When Reggie, shortly after signing a five-year, $2.9 million contract with the Yankees, told a magazine writer that he — not Captain Thurman Munson, not anybody else — was "the stick that stirs the drink," he wasn't kidding.

Reggie never lets the waters get calm. If he isn't leading a September surge for the pennant, blasting three home runs to clinch a World Series or provoking a rain of "Reggie!" bars from the stands, he is feuding with his manager or saying uncomplimentary things about his boss.

"Controversy follows me around like a black cat," Jackson once said sorrowfully.

The latest incident arose at the "Goodbye to Catfish Hunter" day last Sunday at the Stadium. Reggie said he had this handsome golden replica of the World Series trophy to present to his longtime team-mate and Steinbrenner wouldn't let him do it.

Steinbrenner insisted it wasn't so. He didn't even know about the request, he said. He intimated Reggie might be up to some old tricks — using other people to serve his own purposes.

A couple of weeks ago Reggie told a reporter that he felt insulted when Steinbrenner, defending his decision to bring back Martin as manager, told Jackson, "You better get your head screwed on, boy" — regarded by Reggie as a racial slur. Steinbrenner defended his record as a longtime supporter of black causes, but felt his reputation was damaged.

Jackson insists that he has lost communication with Steinbrenner and draws only "boos" from strongly pro-Martin fans who once cheered him. He says he wants out. Steinbrenner's patience is visibly wearing thin. Martin is said to have made two requests within the past week that the Yankees get rid of their controversial, clutch-performing super star.

Are the holes too big to patch? Ask Dear Abby.

When Reggie became a free agent after the 1976 season, he was courted by several clubs but hooked by Steinbrenner, who took him on a tour of the big city and dined him at the posh spots.

"I was aware that Jackson had problems at Oakland and Baltimore," Steinbrenner said, "but I thought he would grow into the Yankee image and achieve greatness."

The Yankee boss defended Jackson when the latter was accused of roughing up a 13-year-old kid after the all-star game in 1977, backed him in his early feuds with Martin and chided fans who booed Reggie when he slipped trying to field a fly ball on that rainy, dreary night in the Stadium Aug. 18.

What brought about the schism, then?

It hasn't been unusual for Reggie, disdaining the warning that familiarity breeds contempt, to barge into the executive offices on the slightest whim. This happened when Steinbrenner abruptly brought Martin back as manager June 19.

Steinbrenner was outraged. That's when he told Reggie to concentrate on earning his fat salary and leave decision-making to him. That's when Reggie said he didn't want to be a Yankee any longer and the Yankees started trying to oblige.

Withdrawal of British star jolts world squash event organizer

TORONTO (CP) — Britain's Jonah Barrington, the former world No.1 player, and possibly the best-known known player that squash has known, upset the world championships, which start here Thursday, by withdrawing at the last moment. Barrington claimed he had a hip injury, but has been reported to the International Squash Players' Association by tournament organizer, Murray Christison.

Although 37, Barrington, seeded ninth, still is one of the world's leading players, and also a major part of the plans to sell the game in Canada. "It's the biggest blow that squash could have had," said Christison. "Jonah claims he has a hip injury, but it wasn't until I went to the Toronto airport yesterday (Monday) and found that he wasn't there that I knew anything about it."

Stallworth settles suit

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Isaac Stallworth, formerly with New Orleans Jazz of the National Basketball Association, has settled out of court for $40,000 on a suit he filed against a local taxi cab company after being injured in a traffic accident.

The suit arose from an accident March, 1977, when a cab that Stallworth and four other Jazz players were riding in collided with another vehicle.

A Canadian Figure Skating Association spokesman said Tuesday that Baier, from Mitchell, Ont., suffered an injury last Friday that will keep the pair out of competition here.

Canada's other entry in the pairs event this week will be Rebecca Gough and Mark Rowsom of Cambridge, Ont., runnersup behind Baier and Eisler in this year's Canadian junior pairs final.

Also on the team are Heather Kemkaran of Toronto, who lost her women's title to Morrisey this year, Gary Beacom of Toronto and the Halifax couple of Marie McNeil and Bob McCall who placed third in the national senior dance final this year.

The Flaming Leaves competition starts Thursday with compulsory figures for men and women, two compulsory dances and the pairs short program.

Knicks sign veterans

Post for Andrews

Dave Andrews of Victoria has been selected by the International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF) to conduct the first clinics in a program to upgrade coaching and officiating expertise in Tier II and Tier III countries.

Andrews, the British Columbia hockey development program coordinator, has just returned from a successful tour of Korea and Japan, which initiated the upgrading program.

"The hockey development program here has benefitted many British Columbians over the past few years, now other areas of the world are able to benefit from Dave Andrews' expertise," said Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis while announcing the appointment.

Bateman, Nelson lead

Mount. Douglas harriers came up with a one-two finish in the five-kilometre boys' race as competition opened Tuesday on a University of Victoria course in the Greater Victoria High School Cross-Country League.

Peggy Nelson of Dunsmuir collected a victory in the two-kilometre girls' race in 10:09 and was followed by runner-up Bunny Hutton of Spectrum and Rosalind Penty of St. Michael's University School.

Toye makes shift to Toronto team

TORONTO (CP) — Clive Toye has officially joined Toronto Blizzard as president and general manager, the North American Soccer League club announced Tuesday.

Toye, 46, moves from Chicago Sting where he served as president. He resigned from the Chicago club last week.

Spectrum girls notch third win

Spectrum and Oak Bay extended unbeaten streaks in the "A" division of the Greater Victoria High School Girls' Field Hockey League with one-sided decisions Tuesday.

Spectrum boosted its record to 3-0 by blasting St. Michael's University School 5-1 while Oak Bay won its second second game with a 4-1 victory over Parkland.

In the other "A" division match, Victoria High blanked Norfolk House, 5-0.

"A" DIVISION

"B" DIVISION

Cup cricket final

Castaways, the defending champions, will face Incogs on Saturday in the final of the annual Victoria and District Cricket Association competition for the Knockout Cup at Beacon Hill Park.

The match gets underway at 12:30 p.m.

In the event of rain, the match will be rescheduled for the same time and pitch Sunday.

Spartans, Bays show power

Claremont Spartans, Oak Bay Bays, Mt. Douglas Thistles, Victoria Tyees and Parkland Panthers collected victories during matches Tuesday in the Greater Victoria High School Boys' Soccer League with Claremont and Oak Bay staging the biggest scoring sprees.

Spartans blanked Belmont Braves 6-0, Bays tripped Esquimalt Dockers 5-1, Thistles edged Spectrum 1-0, Tyees topped Reynolds Roadrunners 3-1 and Panthers downed Stelly's Stingers, 4-2.

At Belmont, Morris Youell led Spartans with two goals and singles were contributed by Dan Hammick, Jamie Masters, Mike Deheny and Dave Robbins. Kevin Mathews earned the shutout.

While Tuesday's contests were season-openers for most clubs, they produced a second victory for the Tyees, who had launched the schedule last Friday with a 3-2 decision over the Braves at Belmont.

Canadians take lead

KELOWNA (CP) — The Canadian men's volleyball team defeated Suntory of Japan on Tuesday to take a 2-1 lead in a four-match exhibition series in British Columbia communities.

The Canadian team outpowered the Japanese national team 15-12, 15-8 and 15-9.

Team captain Al Kostiuk, 23, of Abbotsford, led the Canadian effort with 12 spike kills and six block kills in the three games. Paul Gratton, 20, of Hull, Que. was next highest scorer with 11 spike kills.

Beaten boxer blames ref

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Mike Rossman chose to blame the referee rather than himself for his stunning defeat by Ramon Ranquello, a defeat that puts a serious damper on any designs the former light-heavyweight champion had of regaining the title.

Rossman was stopped with 10 seconds remaining in the sixth round Tuesday night by Ranquello, a journeyman fighter at best. Ranquello decked Rossman with smashing right hands twice in the sixth round — the first time with 59 seconds to go and then again with 34 seconds remaining.

Ranquello, who had been floored twice himself in the third round, then charged back at the 23-year-old Rossman, but referee Paul Venti interceded and stopped the scheduled 12-round bout at Giants Stadium.

Rossman was furious. He verbally assaulted Venti in the ring. He verbally assaulted Venti in the lockerroom. Rossman indeed looked hurt and glassy-eyed. But there was only 10 seconds remaining in the round and it seemed he could have held on and regrouped between rounds.

"When a fighter's welfare is at stake, there is no time for clocks," Venti said.

Rossman wasn't buying that.

"How can you stop the fight? One guy gets knocked down twice and the fight continues. The other gets knocked down twice and it's over," he said angrily.

It was an extremely costly defeat for the Turnersville, N.J., native. Galindez was recently stipped of his World Boxing Association title and Rossman and Marvin Johnson were the likely candidates to fight for the vacant crown.

That's now down the drain, along with a lucrative payday.

"How can you stop the fight?," Rossman repeated. "I got up at the count of three. He said, 'How do you feel?' I said, 'I'm great, man.' Then he pushed me beside the ropes like something was wrong. I was all right.'

"I didn't take this fight lightly. He's got two hands and I've got two hands and anything can happen. But he's got the referee on his side. I need a hometown, that's what I need. I just wish I had a referee on my side. I don't understand it. I can't get a break."

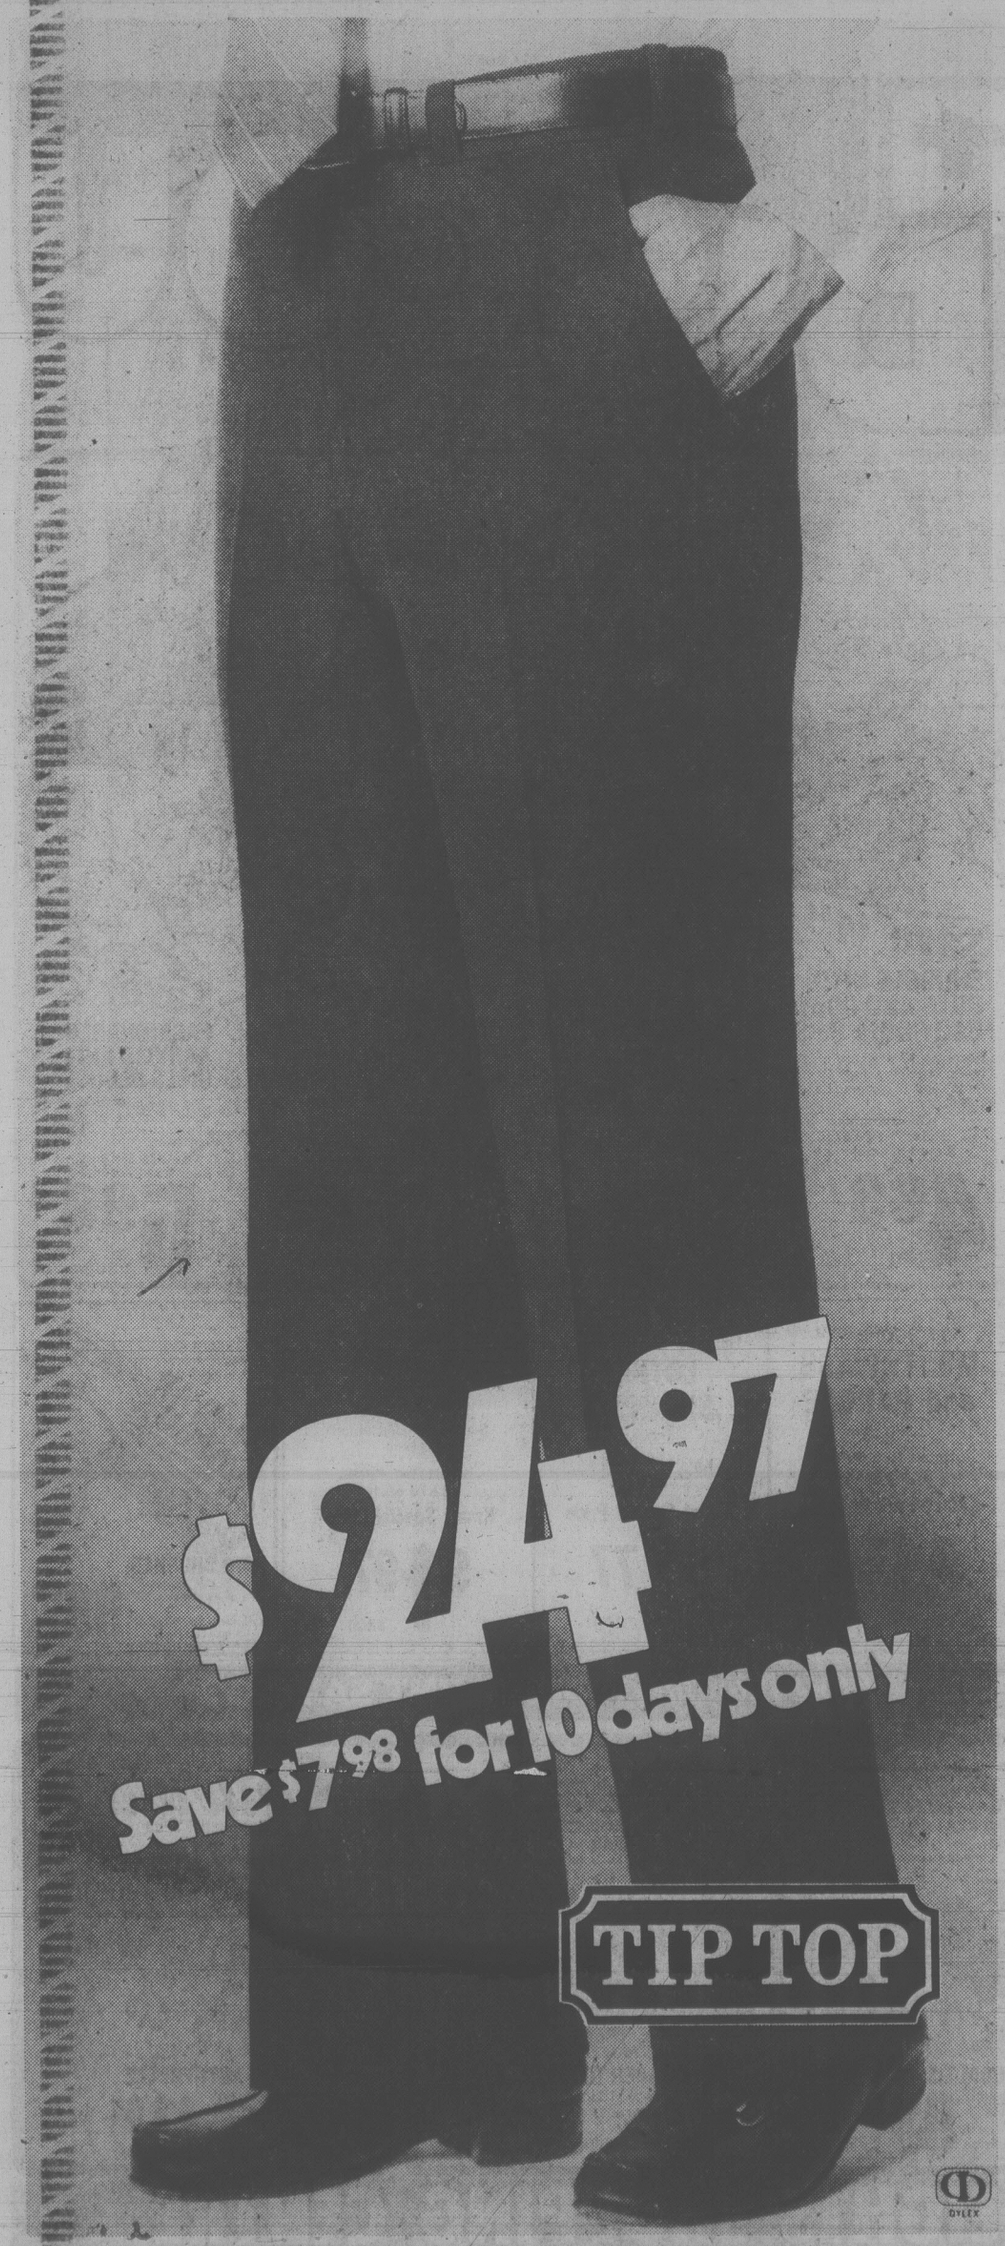

Rossman was an easy target for the lumbering Ranquello, 26, who improved his record to 14-5-1. Rossman didn't seem to be bothered by the right hand he broke in the Galindez fight but was defenceless against Ranquello's thunderous rights.

"He was easy for me to hit with my right hand. I never hit anybody else like I hit him," Ranquello said. "He gave me a good punch but I can wake up. Rossman hits very hard."

Ireland to ban SA rugby visit

DUBLIN (Reuter) — The Irish government said Tuesday it would ban the proposed visit by a South African multi-racial rugby union team to Ireland.

But in London the four home unions tours committee secretary, John Lawrence, said that as far as England, Scotland and Wales were concerned, the tour would still go on.

In a statement issued after a cabinet meeting, the Irish government said it had reluctantly decided that it should not permit the South Africans visit to take place and the government was "accordingly arranging to take steps to refuse entry of the team to Ireland."

The statement said the government took note of the Irish Rugby Football Union's contention that the South African team was a genuinely mixed team selected on a non-racial basis, but was not satisfied.

The four home unions — England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales — invited the South African team to play two matches in each of the four countries next month.

The British government has also expressed opposition to the tour on the grounds that it does not consider rugby in South Africa to be non-racial and the tour would cut across its obligation under the Gleneagles agreement.

This agreement, made two years ago, requires Commonwealth countries to discourage sporting links with South Africa.

Declaring in London that the tour would go ahead in England, Scotland and Wales, Lawrence said that in the event of massive disruption by anti-apartheid demonstrators, the matches might be switched to secret venues.

Anti-apartheid groups have been reported to be planning to throw the tour into chaos by such means as releasing rabbits on to grounds during play, "buzzing" players with model air planes and scattering glass.

The South African team, already chosen, consists of eight white, eight coloured (mixed race) and eight black players.

Keegan believes his club can break England's run

By Reuter

Kevin Keegan, European footballer-of-the-year, is confident that his West German club SV Hamburg can break England's recent run of success in the European Soccer Cup.

Keegan played on the Liverpool team that took Europe's top club trophy in 1977, before switching his talents to Bundesliga.

Liverpool retained the cup a year later, while last season its English rival Nottingham Forest defeated Sweden's Malmoe in the final.

"We are a very good side," Keegan said. "I just hope that if we meet Liverpool on the way to the final we have a 6-0 lead before playing them in England."

Hamburg began its quest with a first round, first leg match away to Icelandic champions Valur Reykjavik. Nottingham Forest is at home to Sweden's Oesters Vaexjoe, while Liverpool entertains Dinamo Tbilisi of the Soviet Union.

More than 100 teams are in action this week in three cup competitions — the European Cup, Cup Winners Cup, and the European Football Union (UEFA) Cup.

Spain's Barcelona will be defending the Cup Winners Cup. The Spaniards have lost Dutch midfield Dynamo Johan Neeskens to New York Cosmos of the North American Soccer League but have bought Danish star Allan Simonsen to link up with Austrian ace striker Hans Krankl.

West Germany's Borussia Moenchengladbach will be striving to retain the UEFA trophy and seems unlikely to be troubled by Norway's Viking Stavangar in its opening match.

Malmoe proved the shock team of last season's European Cup campaign, reaching the final against all odds.

This time it could be the turn of Belgium's Beveren to upset the form book. Last year they surprised even themselves by reaching the semi-finals of the Cup Winners Cup, thanks mainly to the inspired goalkeeping of Jean-Marie Pfaff.

Meanwhile in Berne, European soccer administrators appealed for fair play and sporting behavior in the major club competitions today, but warned they would severely punish transgressing players and spectators.

The European Football Union (EFA) said unsporting acts by players harmed not only opponents but themselves and soccer generally.

USFA recalled that last June it lifted or reduced suspensions imposed for field offences on 97 players from 26 countries in an "amnesty" marking the soccer body's 25th anniversary.

But it added it would continue to harshly punish any future field and crowd disturbances.

Legia nips Manchester City

WARSAW (Reuter) — Legia Warsaw of Poland beat Manchester City of England 2-1 Tuesday in a farewell match for Kazimierz Denya who transferred from Legia to City last year.

Denya, who played a half for each team, scored a goal for Legia as well as Manchester City's lone tally. Kusto scored Legia's other goal.

Threatened by kidnappers, Barcelona player guarded

MADRID (AFP) — Danish soccer player Allan Simonssen, who plays for Spanish club FC Barcelona, has been threatened by kidnappers, it was reported Tuesday.

Few details of the kidnap threat are known, but the Madrid daily, El Pais, reported that Simonssen was being guarded 24 hours a day by private detectives hired by his soccer club.

The paper said such threats are not new to FC Barcelona: A few years ago its Dutch player Johan Cruyff, now captain of Los Angeles Aztecs of the North American Soccer League, was the target of a similar kidnap threat.

Former sleeping giant of sports being roused by junior programs

By KEN PETERS

MEXICO CITY (AP) — China, the former sleeping giant of international sports, is slowly rumbling to life, shaking off the effects of a decade's slumber.

"Sports in our country was in a period of stagnation from 1967 until 1976," said Wei Ji Tong, head of the Chinese delegation to the recent World Student Games. "The 'Gang of Four' wished to stop the people from competing in sports on an international level, wanted to end the popularity of sports, wanted us to stop uplifting the standards of sports in our country.

"So, our coaches did not carry out their studies, and our athletes fell behind the rest of the world," said Tong, speaking through an interpreter. "Our sports standards dropped very low."

Since the fall of the "Gang of Four," Chairman Mao's widow and three others who controlled the country after Mao's death, sports development in China has progressed at a rapid rate.

In the Student Games Sept. 2-13, the Chinese divers won six of the 12 medals handed out. Chen Sho Sha, a tiny and artistic Chinese university student, won a gold in the women's platform after having taken a silver in the three-meter springboard competition.

The Chinese also won four bronzes. They might have fared even better, but the judges appeared to favor the better-known divers from the Soviet Union, who collected three of the four diving gold medals.

In contrast to the Chinese divers, making their first full-scale appearance on an international level in many years, the veteran United States squad did not win a single medal.

"Our country now has the program of four modernizations," said Tong, referring to China's plans to bring its standard of living up to that of the most advanced nations.

"We consider sports to be a part of our modernization, and competing on an international level like here at the University Games helps us in our move to modernization."

China's first appearance at an international competition in recent years was at the University Games in Sofia, Bulgaria, in 1977. But the Chinese had little success there.

However, it was apparent at the Games here that the nation is making strides toward becoming a factor on the world sports scene.

Asked when China might have an impact on the Olympics, Tong replied that his country hopes for some measure of success next year in Moscow, assuming that the problems between his country and the IOC concerning China's eligibility for the Olympics is worked out. He added that he was certain the problem would be resolved.

Talking about China's sports master plan, Tong said: "Just like the other parts of our society, we have a five-year plan, a 10-year plan, and even a 20-year plan for sports. So far, I believe we are on schedule."

Sports that are less popular on an international level have caught the people's fancy.

"We are very good in shooting, weightlifting, table tennis and volleyball," Tong said. "Archery, skiing and skating are popular in the north of our country. Swimming, diving and water polo are very popular in the south."

Asked about the state of track and field, he smiled and replied: "I'd rather not talk about that. Our standards are not high in track and field. We have competition in our schools, but our athletes are not very good.

"We do have some athletes who are relatively good in the long jump, high jump and a few running events, but we are very weak in many field events like the shotput and discus."

The general sports program that has evolved in China since the new regime has come to power parallels that of most Communist nations and it is the younger athletes who are doing the most to rouse the former sleeping giant.

We have many junior programs for most sports," said Tong. "Then those athletes with promise go to our physical culture college for more highly-developed training.

"There was the long delay in our sports development, and our coaches have to catch up on techniques. Our new sports leadership has been developing in a big way, and rapidly."

Tong, looking back on the period of sports decline in his country, said China is much better off for its sports activity today, both on a local and international level.

"We can say nothing if our people are not strong and in good health," he said.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — New York Cosmos have left for Hong Kong and the start of a six-week tour of the Far East.

The former North American Soccer League champions will visit two continents and six countries in a 12-game exhibition series.

Trial with Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kevin Cole, a 23-year-old running back from San Jose State, will take a crack at joining the British Columbia Lions during a five-day Canadian Football League trial this week.

Traded Tiger-Cat ponders decision

HAMILTON (CP) — Offensive guard Bart Evans was left with a problem this week when Hamilton Tiger-Cats traded him to Winnipeg Blue Bombers for defensive tackle Linden Davidson.

"What's kind of nice is that Winnipeg is my hometown and it would be nice to go back," Evans said after learning of the trade.

"But what's killing me is the cost of relocating and that's probably going to be around $2,000."

Evans also has to consider the fact his wife is expecting a baby next month and he has a good position with a Hamilton bank.

"The job is generally going well and I have a future to consider. I'm still undecided and I'm considering retirement. I'm trying to work out both aspects and see if something can be done."

Dress-code fines strike three clubs

TORONTO (CP) — Three Canadian Football League teams, including Edmonton Eskimos, whose defensive back Joe Hollimon is a second offender, have been fined for non-conformance by players to the uniform dress code, commissioner Jake Gaudaur said Tuesday.

Edmonton was fined $200 as a second offender. The Eskimos were fined $100 when Hollimon exposed his knee pads in a game played Aug. 14. In a game played Sept. 9, he was caught with pants and stockings that did not meet below the knees, Gaudaur said.

Salim new UN assembly leader

Times News Services

UNITED NATIONS — A man accused by President Richard Nixon in 1971 of having put on a "shocking demonstration" when the U.N. General Assembly voted to recognize the People's Republic of China Tuesday became president of the 34th General Assembly.

Salim Salim, U.N. ambassador from Tanzania, later denied that he had performed a "victory jig" after the vote that gave the Peking regime the General Assembly seat previously held by the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

"If clapping hands and smiling is undignified, I'll accept the charge," he told reporters later, adding that Africans tend to express themselves with body movement more than Europeans and Americans do.

Also at its opening session Tuesday, the assembly agreed to admit its 152nd member, Saint Lucia.

But the body General Assembly faced its first major controversy Tuesday as Vietnam challenged the seating of representatives of the ousted Pol Pot government of Cambodia.

Salim president of the assembly, referred the dispute to a nine-nation credentials committee and asked that it report to the main body on Friday. The composition of the committee, appointed by outgoing assembly President Indalecio Lievano of Colombia, appeared to ensure that the Pol Pot delegation would retain its seat.

A regime supported by the Vietnamese and headed by Heng Samrin was installed in Phnom Penh last January. Pol Pot and his supporters fled the capital but remain active in the countryside as guerrillas.

Only two U.N. members, the Soviet Union and the Congo (Brazzaville), are believed to be firm supporters of the Vietnamese stand in favor of seating the representatives of the Heng Samrin government.

"I pray," Salim said with typical candor, "that the assembly will decide the question and that the chair will not called on to rule" on the Cambodia question.

Salim, 37, is the acknowledged leader of the African bloc in the United Nations. So much is his leadership accepted that he has become known as the "sixth veto" in the Security Council. The official veto power in the Security Council is allocated by the U.N. Charter to the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and China.

Salim is firmly committed to the Third World position that a new international economic order must be installed.

There has been much speculation here that Salim might become the first African secretary general of the United Nations, perhaps even challenging Secretary General Kurt Waldheim if the Austrian tries for a third term this year. But Salim rejects such speculation.

World's illiterates increasing

Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, director-general of the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, reported last week that the world illiteracy rate was dropping in percentage figures to a projected 28.9 per cent in 1980 from 32.4 per cent in 1970. But the number of illiterates will increase in the same period to 814 million from 742 million.

If current trends continue, M'Bow said, there will be 954 million illiterate adults in the world by the next century.

Figures provided by UNESCO show that women make up more than 60 per cent of the world's illiterates.

U.S. eyes further tuna war blows

SEATTLE (AP) — Members of Washington's congressional delegation have called for a secondary embargo on Canadian imports if an immediate resolution is not reached in a fisheries dispute which has resulted in the seizure of 19 American tuna boats by Canada.

U.S. Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (Dem.-Wash.) called the seizures and confiscation of some of the vessels' catches "imprudent and objectionable," especially since the U.S. "was negotiating in good faith to end the conflict" at the time.

An embargo on the importing of Canadian tuna and tuna products was put into effect after the vessels were seized inside Canada's 200-mile fishery limit late last month.

The United States does not recognize the 200-mile fishing limit for migratory species such as tuna.

"If a reasonable approach is not immediately possible," Rep. Don Bonker said, "America can and should take action beyond the primary embargo that was imposed under provisions of the Fishery Conservation and Management Act."

N.Y. bank's prime 13¼% after Washington ups rate

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chemical Bank of New York today raised its prime rate to 13¼ per cent, a quarter point increase that puts the interest rate at another all-time high.

The action by Chemical, the nation's sixth largest bank, followed the increase Tuesday by the Federal Reserve Board in the discount rate — what it charges member banks for loans — to a record 11 per cent from 10½ percent.

The increase in the discount rate signalled the Fed's determination to use high interest rates to cool borrowing and, it hoped, to dampen inflation.

While the recent climb in the prime has been a reaction to hikes in other interest rates, money market analysts are beginning to express doubts about just how much further the Fed will be willing to tighten credit.

At some point, tighter credit will start to discourage borrowing and, in turn, slow economic activity that already is in a recessional phase, in the view of many analysts. Overly tight money would serve to worsen the economic slowdown as it did in the 1973-75 recession.

The Fed's decision to raise its lending rate to banks came after an unusual 4-3 vote indicating that some members want no further increase in rates in the face of a recession.

Officially, the Fed said the action "was taken against the background of recent increases in other short-term interest rates to bring the discount rate in closer alignment with short-term rates generally and to discourage excessive borrowing by member banks" from the Federal Reserve.

Federal Reserve Governor Charles Partee, who along with governors Nancy Teeters and Emmett Rice voted against the increase, said he had done so "because it is pretty late in the whole cycle of events" to raise rates another notch and because he feared the move would not help ease the current economic downtrend.

Meanwhile, in one recessionary sign, the Commerce Department reported that personal income increased only $8.4 billion in August as industrial layoffs trimmed payrolls.

Plant closed for uranium hunt

ERWIN, Tenn. (AP) — The U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission ordered an immediate shutdown Tuesday of an atomic fuel fabrication plant after the plant reported the apparent loss of weapons-grade uranium.

Frank Gillespie of the NRC's regional office in Atlanta said the material missing from the Nuclear Fuel Services Inc. plant in Erwin "could possibly be turned into a weapon with appropriate knowledge."

Frank Ingram, a spokesman for the NRC in Washington, said the firm reported losing at least nine kilograms of "high-enriched" uranium. He confirmed, however, that while officials have not ruled out theft of the material, they are studying the possibility of an accounting error at the plant.

William Dircks, director of the NRC's nuclear materials safeguards office, said the plant will likely be shut down for at least 45 days.

Minister No. 2 quits in Iran

TEHRAN (Reuter) — The Iranian government announced Tuesday the resignation of Defence Minister Taqi Riahi, the second member of Premier Mehdi Bazargan's government to resign in a week.

The official Pars news agency said Gen. Riahi resigned because of ill health. Informed sources said they understood he was undergoing treatment abroad, possibly in Paris.

Education Minister Gholam Hossein Shokuhi earlier stepped down, also on health grounds.

The resignations follow a verbal tussle between the Bazargan government and members of the ruling, clergy-dominated Revolutionary Council over the cabinet's role in post-revolutionary affairs.

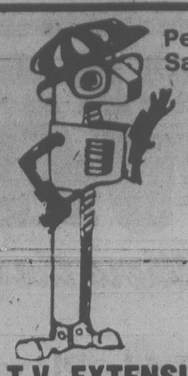

Bazargan last weekend defended his government against charges that it was ineffectual by saying it had been stripped of its powers to deal with the problems facing Iran.

In Paris, Iranian opposition sources said the defence minister's resignation was the "direct result of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's decision to proclaim himself supreme commander of the armed forces."

At the height of the recent crisis in western Iran, where Iranian forces are still fighting a sporadic war against Kurdish guerrillas, Ayatollah Khomeini declared himself supreme commander of the armed forces and ordered troops to the region to crush an alleged rebellion.

PERSIAN RUG SALE
WHY BUY PERSIAN RUGS?
BECAUSE IF: There is a Persian rug on the floor. What does that tell you about its owner? Probably that he is well-off. Also, he'll be a secure person because a Persian rug is a good saleable item in these inflation-ridden times. It is easier to sell expensive Oriental carpets today in a sluggish economy than it was in the 1950's and 60's although the average price of an authentic Oriental carpet has greatly increased in recent years. An Oriental rug is an excellent hedge against inflation because its value increases constantly. The reason for this is the increased wealth and industrialization of Mid-East countries. Weavers and master artists are leaving their traditional work and are entering industrial employment. In Addition the Shah of Iran had introduced compulsory education thereby effectively eliminating the employment of children in rug weaving, says Ejaz Khan of B.C. Palace Ltd. Mr. Khan will be displaying an excellent selection of Persian carpets and rugs that will appeal to the discriminating and budget conscious home decorator and art lovers offered to you at Bargain Prices. Mr. Khan invites you to come and investigate the opportunities provided by Oriental carpets, to make an investment that safeguards your money and provides you with luxury as it appreciates.

French join arms elite with N-gear

PARIS (Reuter) — France is developing a new generation of mobile nuclear missiles that will raise its armaments to the level of U.S. and Soviet forces, Defence Minister Yvon Bourges said Tuesday.

A second generation of land-based strategic nuclear missiles is being prepared for the next decade, he said. They will be carried aboard trailers and have a range of several thousand miles.

Bourges, presenting his 1980 defence budget, said French nuclear fire power has doubled in the past three years, will treble by next year and quadruple by 1982.

France's arsenal includes five nuclear-powered submarines equipped with megatonic nuclear missiles. A sixth nuclear submarine now being built, the Inflexible, will be equipped with multiple warheads, the first to go into service with the French armed forces.

In the coming months, thermonuclear megaton missiles will replace smaller weapons now deployed in southern France.

The air force is also equipping a new squadron with 20-kiloton AN-52 tactical missiles.

Military spending in France will reach the $25-billion mark next year, a 14-per-cent increase over this year's defence spending, Bourges said.

Donation deflects flak flying over Pope's visit

BOSTON (AP) — The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston blunted debate over the cost of Pope John Paul's visit to the city next month in announcing Tuesday that it would pay for a $150,000 platform and altar to be used in a papal mass.

"It would be a great pity if the public discussion of financial matters relating to the pope's visit were to distract us from this unique opportunity," said Rev. William Helmick, the archdiocese's co-ordinator for the Pope's Oct. 1 visit to Boston.

The city had planned to help pay for construction of platforms for the altar and the 300-member choral group that will take part in the Mass. City officials had estimated the cost of the papal visit, including police overtime, at $700,000.

The archdiocese said Tuesday that it will also assume the cost of the sound and electrical systems as well as the cost of the choir platform.

At a city council meeting last week, a Protestant minister, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and birth control and abortion advocate William Baird objected to the use of public funds to help pay for the visit.

Similar objections have been raised in Philadelphia over plans to build a platform for a papal altar. There, lawyers for the city and American Civil Liberties Union have agreed to put off the suit until after the visit, with the church agreeing to pay for the platform if the city loses the legal battle.

Baird went to U.S. district court in Boston on Tuesday before the announcement to seek an injunction against the use of public funds and the use of the Boston Common for the papal Mass.

Last weekend, church officials called for special church donations in honor of the Pope's visit to Boston — his first stop on a six-city tour of the United States.

Hawks win arms vote

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In a dramatic though symbolic demonstration of a new mood of toughness, the Senate Tuesday voted 55-42 to permit five percent annual increases in the 1981 and 1982 defence budgets.

This would amount to $25 billion more than the Senate Budget Committee had recommended for defence, and would give the United States a $163.3 billion defence budget in 1982, much more than President Carter has asked for.

The Senate's vote was the best evidence yet of the changing temper since hearings began in July on the new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. Tuesday's vote suggested the existence of a new — but not necessarily permanent — consensus in the Senate supporting substantially expanded American defence effort in response to the Soviet buildup of recent years.

The Carter administration had supported a three percent annual increase in defence spending, but the hawkish senators who backed the five percent alternative decisively carried the Senate, winning key moderate votes in both the Democratic and Republican columns.

Earlier, the Senate approved by 79-19 an administration supported proposal to add three percent, or $3.23 billion, to the fiscal 1980 defence budget.

The defence spending issue has become part of the debate over SALT II, with a number of senators declaring that they will support the treaty only if it is accompanied by a larger Pentagon budget. Probably the most important senator in this category is Sam Nunn (Dem.-Ga.) one of the backers of the five percent increase approved by the Senate.

After the vote, Nunn said the Senate's position on the budget resolution would not have "strong implications for SALT", since this vote alone could not alter the country's defence posture. He reiterated his desire to see a new commitment from the Carter administration to a stronger defence.

Several Senate sources speculated Tuesday that the vote could improve the SALT treaty's chances for eventual approval.

GM offers new staff less pay

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. won reduced wages for newly hired employees under a new tentative contract, according to a summary distributed Tuesday by the United Auto Workers union.

Currently, new employees are hired at 45 cents an hour below the rate for their jobs. During a 90-day probation, they receive one increase. If they pass probation, they go to the full rate, receiving in a lump sum the difference between three months of full pay and what they actually got in the first three months.

The new agreement — endorsed Monday by the union's executive board — provides an initial wage of 60 cents an hour below the full rate. If the employee passes probation, he is paid the full rate but does not get the difference between the probationary rates and the full rates for the 90-day period.

Ratification voting should begin after Saturday and be complete by Oct. 1, the union has said.

Courts pounce on Soviet 'spy' when freed by psychiatrists

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — Accused Soviet spy Ivan Rogalsky was released from a state psychiatric hospital Tuesday and immediately arrested by federal agents on espionage charges.

Rogalsky, 36, appeared briefly in Newark before U.S. District Judge Herbert Stern, who last year found the Russian seaman incompetent to stand trial and a danger to society and himself.

Saying it was "never my intention that this defendant be at large," Stern ordered Rogalsky held in federal custody in lieu of $500,000 bond pending a new battery of psychiatric tests to determine his mental competency.

Doctors at the Marlboro Psychiatric Hospital in Marlboro said Rogalsky "manifested no behavioral disorders" during the six months he spent at the facility living in an open cottage and he no longer was a danger.

Public defender Thomas Higgins told Stern that Rogalsky "never harmed" or "threatened" anyone and he "could have escaped" if he had wanted to.

"He had the freedom of the grounds," Higgins said.

But Higgins said Rogalsky, who moved to this country in the early 1970s after jumping ship in Europe, was still incompetent to stand trial and thus protected from prosecution. He asked that the seaman be released on a personal recognizance bond and allowed to live with a friend in Jackson Township.

Assistant U.S. Attorney William Braniff told Stern the government would seek another indictment against Rogalsky charging he conspired to pass classified defence data from an RCA scientist to two Soviet United Nations officials. The two Soviet officials were later asked to leave the country.

Rogalsky has been in federal custody since his arrest in January 1977. Higgins said his client still maintains he was brainwashed by the FBI and that they used lasers and computers to monitor his thoughts.

Couple grilled in bomb death of Mountbatten

DUBLIN (UPI) — A man and a woman are being interrogated by detectives investigating the slaying of Lord Mountbatten, police said today.

The man and woman were arrested Tuesday just over the border from Northern Ireland in County Monaghan and police confirmed they were being questioned in Monaghan town by detectives working on the Mountbatten case.

They said the man is a prominent republican from County Tyrone who has been on their wanted list since the bomb slaying of the British statesmen and three members of his boating party by the Irish Republican Army at Mullaghore, in County Sligo.

Authorities refused to name the man or give any details about the woman, except that she was in custody under anti-terrorist laws that enable police to hold suspects for up to 48 hours.

Two men have already been charged in the slayings.

Refinery blast lights up L.A. area

TORRANCE, Calif. (UPI) — An explosion felt more than 10 miles away blasted a cracking tower at a Mobil Oil refinery Tuesday night, slightly injuring three workers and sending flames flickering 400 feet into the skies south of Los Angeles.

The fire did not spread to gasoline storage tanks and was controlled in about an hour, a Fire Department spokesman said.

The blast at 10:10 p.m. was felt as far away as San Pedro, more than 10 miles away. The refinery, which covers about eight square blocks, is located 18 miles south of downtown Los Angeles.

Torrance police quoted refinery officials as saying there were about 60 workers in the refinery at the time of the blast, and all had been accounted for.

The explosion took place in the cracking tower's gas processing unit, which separates vapors from liquid gasoline during the refining process, a Mobil spokesman said.

The explosion was felt, and the fire was visible, over a large part of the Los Angeles area.

A woman in La Canada, on a mountain slope 25 miles to the north, said she had photographed the blaze.

Legal advice a la carte

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Law Shoppe may be the legal profession's answer to a fast-food outlet with its menu of easy-to-prepare legal services at affordable prices.

"Billions and billions served," said lawyer Jack James at the opening this week of his downtown office, noting that the operation is the first of its kind in Canada.

James said it's time the legal profession admitted it is part of today's consumer-oriented world.

"I feel strongly that there should be more open competition and less mystique and a clear relation to what people's actual needs are," he said.

The mystique about the price of legal services aren't evident at the Law Shoppe, where they are displayed in the office window. Pamphlets also are available and James has advertised in newspapers.

For example: business registration, $15; uncontested divorce, $200; adoption, $100; notarization service, $5; purchase or sale of a home, $200; uncontested separation agreement, $100.

This week's special on the Law Shoppe menu is preparation of a simple will for $19.95, marked down from the usual $20 to $25, depending on the complexity.

James said anyone with a legal problem can telephone his office and get an immediate consultation with a lawyer at $20 for the first half-hour.

He said his methods are not degrading to the traditional solemnity of the legal world and "it's just putting it in its proper perspective."

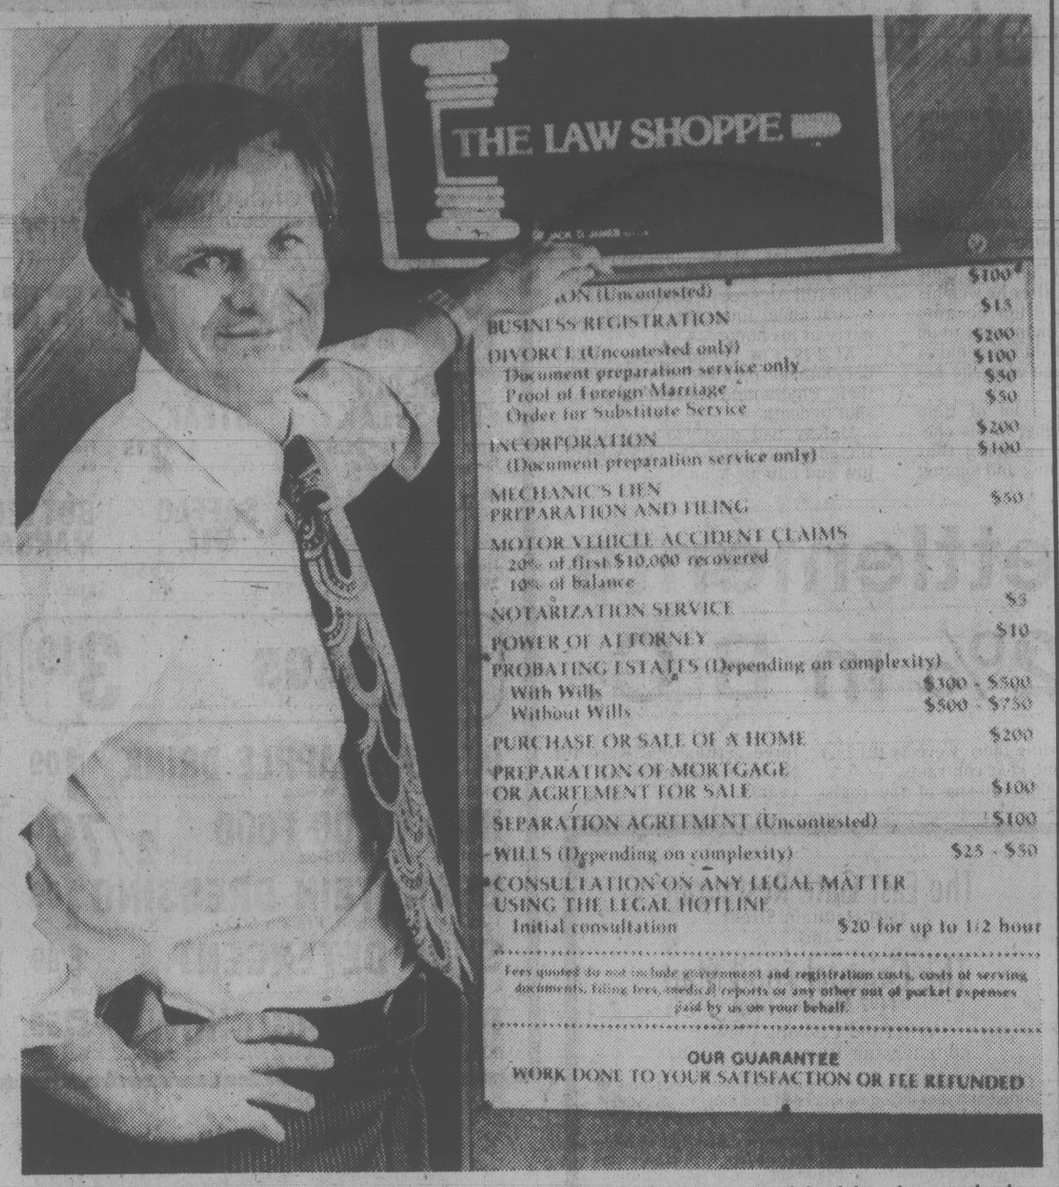

The lawyer admitted his operation may get him into hot water with the British Columbia Law Society, which is in the midst of a legal battle over another lawyer's efforts to advertise.

The B.C. Supreme Court ruled in April, in the case of lawyer Donald Jabour of North Vancouver, that the law society does not have the authority to impose a blanket prohibition of advertising by its members. The decision is being appealed by the law society.

Harry Rankin, spokesman for the law society, said James' operation will be discussed at a law society committee meeting later this month.

The firm, with a 10-member staff, is located at the new Robson Square court building and accepts some charge cards for payment. It also has a branch office in North Vancouver and James has plans for more suburban expansion.

James believes his type of firm will be the legal service of the future.

Limit sought on band claim

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government sought Tuesday to limit its losses to $1.5 million if it loses a suit brought against it by the Musqueam Indian band.

Crown lawyer Gunnar Eggertson said in his opening statement in Federal Court that if damages are awarded to the band, it should not exceed that figure.

Band lawyer Marvin Storrow has said that the band has lost more than $40 million in the first 20 years of a 75-year lease because of misrepresentation by the department of Indian Affairs over leasing a parcel of land now occupied by the Shaughnessy Golf Club.

As many as 40 witnesses are expected to testify on the suit which has taken more than three years to come to court.

Eggertson said that government representatives acted consistently throughout lease negotiations and called the band's position that it was ignorant of the contract terms until many years after it was signed, highly improbable.

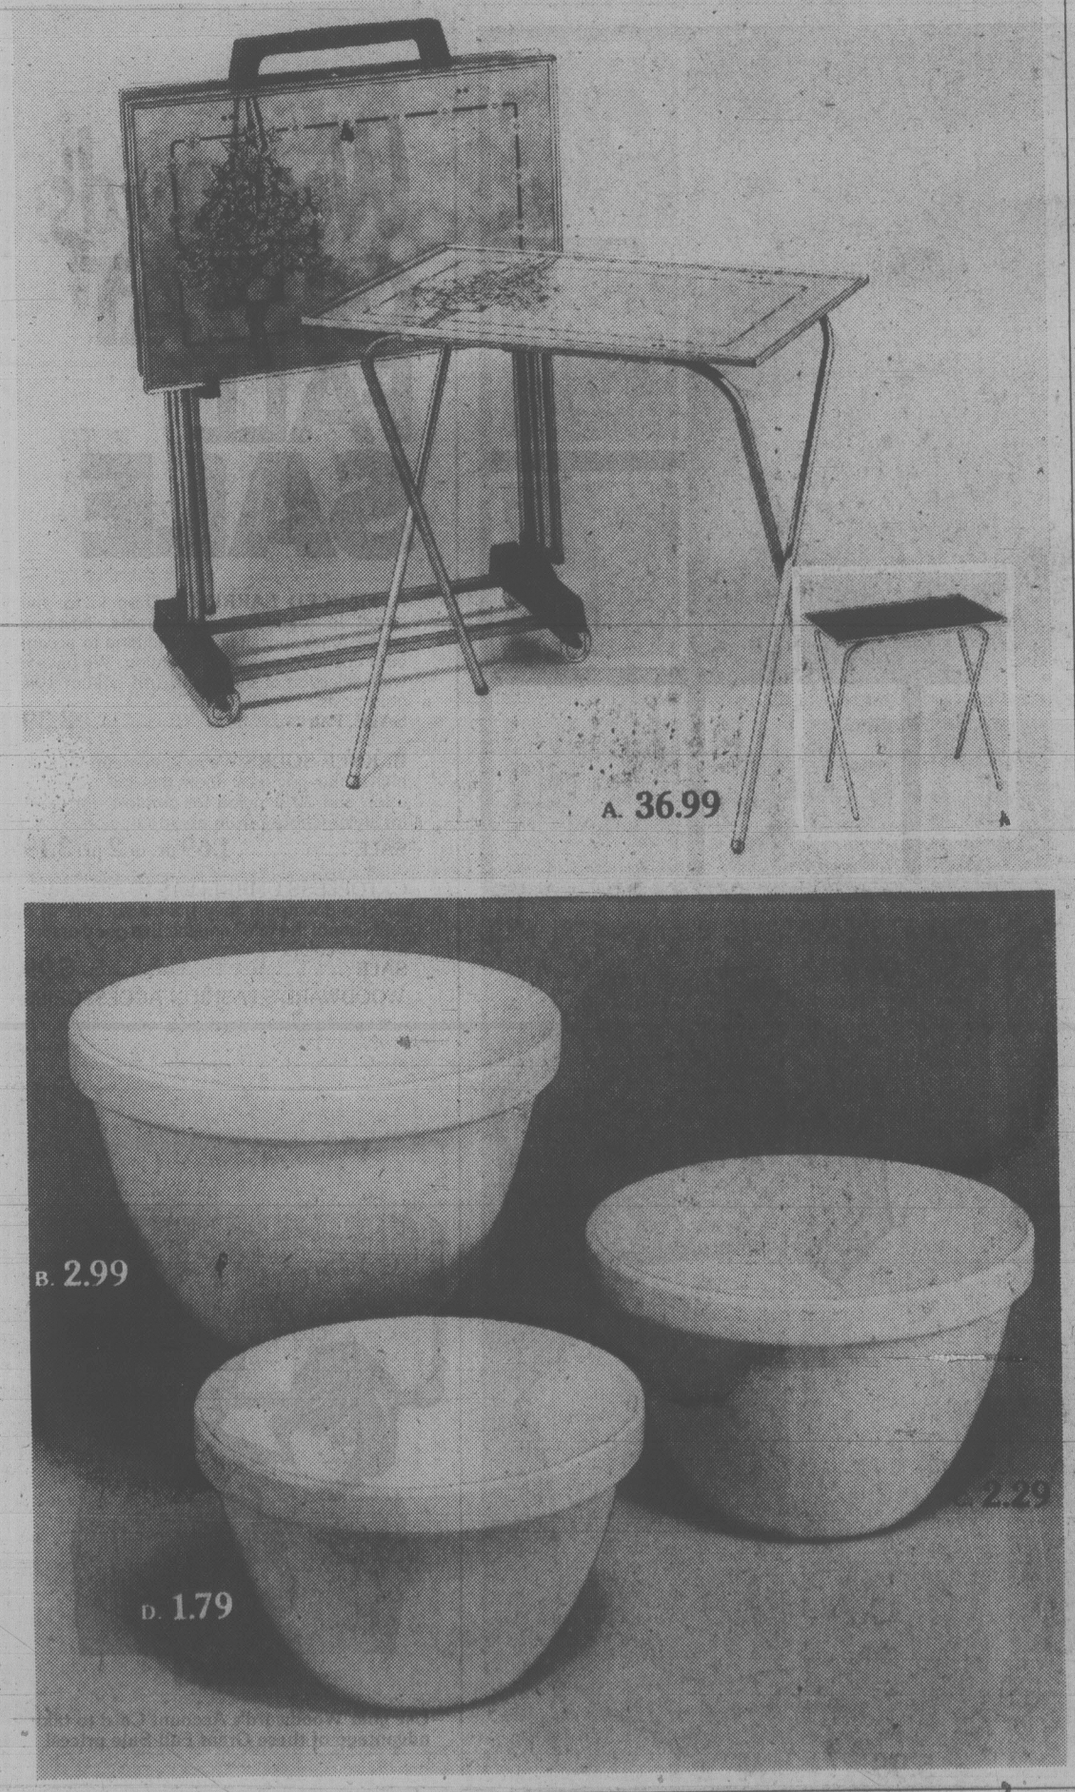

Most of the first day was spent on procedural wrangling, started by a motion by Eggertson to have the band's witnessees excluded while the plaintiffs were testifying.

Mr. Justice Frank Collier went a step further and ordered all witnesses for both sides to be excluded during testimony. However, he excepted those witnesses who needed to instruct their lawyers.

Michael Kew, a University of British Columbia anthropology professor, was the only witness. He traced the band's social and economic history from its early livelihood of hunting and fishing to full participation in the development of the area comprising and surrounding reserve lands.

Crash victim identified

Pressure got to him?

PORT SIMPSON (CP) — Residents of this native Indian village near Prince Rupert say they think the pressure of having to lay down the law to his friends, relatives and long-time acquaintances was getting to Constable Edward McKay, who shot to death his sister and her husband before killing himself.

McKay had volunteered for an RCMP recruiting program for native Indian constables. He had three months training in Regina and worked in Prince Rupert for six weeks before returning here as the Tsimshian Indian band's first police officer.

"(McKay) laid down the law, and when that happens around here the rest of the people would play around and go against him," said a Port Simpson resident who did not want to be identified.

An RCMP officer said he thought McKay was getting pressure from his family over his police work.

McKay's wife left him and their newborn son shortly after he won his badge. His friends often became angry when he told them what to do and what not do, and said they didn't care for him as much after he became a police officer.

McKay, 35, spent a lot of time alone, staying up nights in his one-man police office, ensuring that everything in the fishing and logging community of about 1,000 people ran properly.

When he wasn't working, most of his spare time was spent building a new house on the Port Simpson reserve for his son and new common-law wife.

On Sunday, McKay invited his sister Phyllis, her common-law husband Bill Alexcee — both in their 50s — and about four other friends to a party at his home.

At 2:49 a.m. Monday, the RCMP detachment received a call telling them Phyllis and Alexcee had been shot to death.

McKay had died from a self-inflicted wound which went through his jaw and into his head.

Drunk tank inquest

An inquest will be held into the death of a 34-year-old man who died of meningitis in Vancouver General Hospital only hours after the hospital had released him to the city drunk tank.

Police said Tuesday they took John Landry to hospital Sunday after a paddy wagon driver saw him lying down in the street. He was released about an hour later after medical authorities determined he was drunk and did not require further medical attention, police said.

A doctor examined Landry at the jail some three hours later, who recommended he be taken to St. Paul's Hospital. But St. Paul's refused to take Landry and ordered him sent back to VGH. Landry, placed in the VGH psychiatric ward, died Monday.

Murder charged

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Kerry James Isadore, 20, of Ingenika, B.C., has been commited for trial in provincial court on a charge of second-degree murder. Isadore appeared Monday for preliminary hearing after the shooting death March 14 of Joseph Izony, 29.

Bodies found

FORT NELSON (CP) — The bodies of two American men were found Tuesday with the wreckage of a Cessna 185 amphibian plane which had been missing since Sunday. Richard Mathes, 56, of Dover, N.H., and Stephen Rhodes, 55, of Laconia, N.H., were killed when the plane crashed about 150 kilometres southwest of here.

Picket appeal

FRASER LAKE (CP) — Defence lawyers have asked that all charges be dropped against seven men charged after picket-line incidents during a strike at the nearby Endako molybdenum mine.

Provincial court Judge Cy Woodliffe of Prince George said Tuesday he will set a date to hear the arguments on Thursday.

UIC overpaid

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — More staff and modern equipment enabled the Canada Employment Centre to pinpoint unemployment insurance overpayments totalling $286,713. D. T. S. Dheensaw, district manager in Prince George, said the office detected 1,086 cases of insurance abuse in reviewing 3,786 claim files.

Pay settlements up 1.2% in B.C.

Wage settlements in B.C. during the second quarter of this year averaged 8.9 per cent, up 1.2 per cent from the previous four months, according to the labor ministry's research and planning department.

The labor ministry says that although the rate of wage increases rose 1.2 per cent between the first and second quarters, the actual value of these increases fell slightly from 77 cents to 76 cents.

"The reason is that on average the second quarter settlements were based on contracts that were lower paying."

For the 12-month period from July 1, 1978 to June 30, there have been 504 settlements reported covering 216,494 employees.

During that period, the average annual rate of increase was seven per cent, or 59 cents per hour.

Figures in the August edition of the Labor Research Bulletin also show there were a higher proportion of cost of living adjustment (COLA) clauses reported for the second quarter of this year than in the three previous years.

A total of 30.6 per cent of the agreements contained COLAs affecting the wages of 59.9 per cent of employees who settled in this period.

"These recent figures would indicate that, as was expected, negotiated COLA clauses are regaining their popularity since the end of controls."

The majority of the settlements registered for the second quarter of this year were two-year agreements. Sixty of the 108 agreements (55.5%) were for two years while there were 24 (22.2%) one-year contracts.

OFF TO WAR in a scene reminiscent of earlier conflicts, these infantrymen of the 3rd Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, board support ship Provider at Esquimalt Tuesday bound for a three-week exercise to test continental defence procedures. The joint Canada-U.S. operation, dubbed Kernel Potlach II, involves 40,000 military personnel from the two countries, 45 warships and 150 tactical and transport aircraft. The operation will climax Oct. 1 with a combined assault on the northern tip of Vancouver Island by units of the Canadian Army and the 11th U.S. Marine Amphibious Unit.

Pass policy puzzles Coast Guard

The Canadian Coast Guard captain whose department investigated the the Queen of Alberni ferry grounding said he would refuse to pilot a ferry through Active Pass if another was approaching in the opposite direction.

Capt. William Catinus, chief of casualty investigation, said from Ottawa that procedure is standard for B.C. ferry captains.

"I was suprised they had no order for Active Pass," he said.

The B.C. Ferry Corp. vessel Queen of Alberni hit Collison Reef in the pass on the Tsawwassen-Sidney run between here and southern Vancouver Island.

The coast guard investigation blamed Alberni master Al Bahry for steering off course to avoid what he believed might be a collision with the Queen of Tsawwassen, which was also in the narrow channel.

Catinus said Active Pass is the only one with any cautionary designation.

"If I were running ships I wouldn't pass (another vessel) in Active Pass."

Ferry captains charged earlier Tuesday that masters on the Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay run often must cross in the pass and go too fast to maintain tight schedules set by the government corporation to qualify for performance pay.

Charles Gallagher, corporation manager, denied the charges.

"Their pay is determined by their performance within the salary range, the same as any management," he said.

Divorcee guilty of murder

VANCOUVER (CP) — A California divorcee was found guilty Tuesday on a reduced charge of second-degree murder in the love-triangle slaying of her former husband in a city hotel room in January.

Elizabeth Hutchinson of Palm Desert was sentenced to life in prison by Mr. Justice D. E. Andrews in British Columbia Supreme Court.

The 60-year-old blonde was charged with first-degree murder of Chester Wilson Hutchinson, 62, who died of a bullet wound in his chest Jan. 19. He also was shot in the arm.

The case went to the jury Monday afternoon after the Crown alleged that Mrs. Hutchinson set a trap for her husband in a room at the Sands Hotel.

Jurors returned to the court room Tuesday and told the judge they were not able to reach a verdict. Andrews ordered them to resume their deliberations.

About an hour later the jury returned and the foreman told the court it had found the accused guilty on a reduced charge.

The court was told that Mrs. Hutchinson had twice married and twice divorced her husband in 10 years of marital turmoil.

Mrs. Hutchinson testified she followed her former husband here because he was in arrears in his maintenance payments. She testified that she always carried a small .38-calibre revolver in her purse in the United States for her own protection.

Laskin retirement rumors quashed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Bora Laskin's latest health problems should not prevent the Supreme Court of Canada chief justice from returning to his post as the country's first jurist, sources say.

The 66-year-old chief justice has been confined to a Vancouver hospital bed for almost one month, recovering from two major abdominal operations.

Ottawa has been alive with rumors that Laskin will not return to his post but sources say there is no reason his health will stop him from working.

Danger: tufty plants

A committee of aldermen Tuesday turned down a proposal by Victoria parks administrator Al Smith to spray 2,4-D on half a dozen playing fields pending a report to council next week on possible hazards.

Smith wanted to spray parts of Vic West Park, Oaklands Park, Hollywood Park, Pemberton Park, Topaz Park and Royal Athletic Park.

"The spray control is required to reduce public hazard of tufty weeds on playing fields," he said in a letter.

He wanted permission to spray — it would be the first application of 2,4-D in Victoria this year — while dandelions and plantain are still growing and the weather is good.

The weeds can be dangerous to soccer and rugger players, maintenance superintendent Ron Edwards told the parks committee.

But some members were skeptical.

"I don't think a rugger player would receive too much damage from a dandelion. I think a herd of rugger players is the best way of trampling the weeds down," said committee chairman Ald. John Hayes, who first gave orders last February to stop spraying.

Edwards said they can build up into a stump two or three inches above the level of the playing field and a burly rugger player heading full tilt down the field could suffer injuries if he trips on one.

When Ald. Ron McKenzie asked him what the city did before 2,4-D was invented, Edwards said in the 24 years he has worked for Victoria, the city has always sprayed 2,4-D on parks.

Smith, who will report next week on the health hazards of 2,4-D, added in his letter that he checked with government agencies and was reasonably assured that the use of 2,4-D by the parks department should not be hazardous to the public.

Drowned fisherman identified

A man who drowned late Monday when he fell from a fishing boat off the Queen Charlotte Islands has been identified as Gordon Grenkie, 37, of Nanaimo.

Park design criticized

Victoria's advisory design panel has "strong reservations" about the design of Reeson Park, the Capital Regional District's $178,000 half-acre waterfront park on Wharf Street at the foot of Yates.

The members said the design of the upland part of the park next to Wharf was acceptable, but the existing wharf which Quayle-Gauld landscape architects want to retain does not fit with the other features.

Visitors strolling or sitting on the park's small grassy bowl which leads down to a pebble beach would be faced with an overpowering view of an old dock and creosoted pilings.

"In particular, the height of the south leg of the deck appears to be inconsistent with the pebble beach access to the water.

"Views from the beach will be dominated by the piling and the underside of the deck which will extend up to 15 feet above the level of the water," the panel said.

It recommended a reduction in scale of the deck and that views from the southwest part of the little park remain unimpeded.

Their objections were relayed Tuesday by the city's parks committee back to the CRD for comment, although technically the CRD is not subject to city bylaws and only referred the Reeson Park plans to Victoria as a courtesy.

Crafts centre costs cut plan

The city trimmed some $20,000 in costs from the Fernwood arts and crafts building Tuesday in an attempt to bring the project within its budget.

It is still some $13,000 above the $75,000 in Neighborhood Improvement Program funds available but a decision was made to proceed with the building, which is the old Fernwood bakery opposite the Cool-Aid hostel.

Ald. John Hayes said the cost-cutting means the building will not be completely finished — cupboards and counters and some floor coverings were cut from the budget — but it will be usable by Fernwood residents.

Originally, the Fernwood Community Association undertook the project itself but numerous construction problems cropped up.

When the city called for tenders, Berma Construction submitted the lowest bid at $108,000.

After taking over the renovations, architect Nick Bawlf's firm noted that under FCA management damage that cost almost $16,000 to repair was done, most of it due to shutting off the heating plant.

Work on the building has been held up since an essential steel I beam won't be delivered for another two months.

Heart-a-thon walk

Children who have had open-heart surgery are expected to get the most pledges for the fifth annual Heart-a-thon Walk on Sept. 30.

But everyone is welcome to participate in the five-mile hike and gather pledges for the First Open Heart Society of B.C.

Organizers hope to raise $50,000 this year for eight new heart-monitoring units for the intensive care unit at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

The units will provide 24-hour monitoring of all vital signs, including heart beat and blood pressure.

The Heart-a-thon starts at 1 p.m. at Henderson Park Pavilion on Cedar Hill Crossroad. Participants can walk the full five miles or any part of it.

Birthday gives grain port renewed sense of optimism

CHURCHILL, Man. (CP) — The people of this community on the shore of Hudson Bay were given a renewed optimism about their town's future this week as they celebrated Churchill's 50th year as a port.

Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer rode in a parade of decorated cars, trucks and flatbeds through town to mark the occasion as bitter winds blowing across the bay churned up whitecaps and drove all but the hardy indoors.

In 1929, a rail line was completed to Churchill and a total of 1,800 pounds of wheat was shipped overseas. Officials expect 27 million bushels of grain, mostly barley, to move through the port in its three-month shipping season this year.

The celebration was clouded by recent comments by Jack Murta, the Lisgar Progressive Conservative MP studying grain handling who suggested the port may be a luxury Canada can't afford.

Gordon MacMurchy, Saskatchewan's agriculture minister, called Monday for the federal government to clear that cloud by improving the rail line to Churchill and by fostering an agreement between the two national railways so CP Rail cars can move to the port on CN track.

Much of the grain exported through Churchill comes from northeastern Saskatchewan.

Jake Epp, federal minister of Indian and northern affairs, promised MacMurchy part of his wish. He replied that the federal government was committed to continued use of the port and to upgrading the rail line to handle heavy, grain hopper cars.

"In order to increase our grain export capability by 50 per cent by 1985, Churchill will have to shoulder its share, Churchill also has a role to play as a supply port for future resource development in the North," Epp said.

He said Churchill, and the port of Prince Rupert, B.C., which is to be developed, will serve as a "check against increased shipping charges that have come from time to time on the St. Lawrence seaway."

Churchill stands on the threshold of a vast northern development region, Epp said.

The port has attempted to lengthen its shipping season by arranging for extended maritime insurance coverage against ice damage. But the move met with resistance and Epp said Monday the port's future limits will not be set by actuaries but by the imagination of those who want to see it succeed.

Earlier, port manager Theo Lauzon told about 70 government, transportation and grain industry officials not to view Churchill "through the tinted glasses of vested interests."

He was referring to long-standing criticism that Canadians could better spend their money improving ports at Vancouver and Thunder Bay, where railways and grain companies have already made substantial investments.

Schreyer told the townspeople it was only sensible that the port continue to operate.

"Canada surely has to think in terms of having one community on the Hudson Bay coast that provides the shortest possible shipping distance . . . to a market of some 150 million people living in northeastern Europe and the northwestern part of the Soviet Union."

Churchill's perennial problem of having its shipping season choked off by ice can be solved through Canada's leadership in developing icebreakers, said Peter Noble, vice-president of Arctec Canada Ltd., a research and development firm.

"We have the technology at hand to allow year-round navigation to and from the port of Churchill," Noble said.

"The key to this development is two-fold. Firstly, the desire to extend the season must be there. Secondly, the economic justification must be examined, including the need to provide icebreakers, increased storage and rail transportation systems and navigation aids.

"I believe that foresight on the part of Canadians can build Churchill into a major grain exporting port, with an extended season eminently practical.

"I also believe that the development of the eastern Arctic offshore petroleum exploration business can be catered to by operating supply ships out of Churchill, rather than Maritime ports."

Noble said a nuclear-powered icebreaker now in the design stage might eliminate traditional fuel problems Arctic icebreakers have faced.

Winnipeg core total declines

WINNIPEG (CP) — A report by the Institute of Urban Studies says the city's inner core is continuing to lose its long-term residents.

The author of the report, Frank Johnson, says the area will lose another 9,500 residents by 1981 if recent trends continue.

Johnson says people able to move out of the inner city are choosing to do so, and those who are left and those who move into the area are trapped by poverty and misfortune.

Hillside Helps United Way Campaign

To help meet the United Way's goal in Victoria, Canada Safeway, the Hillside Merchants and C-Fax Radio are sponsoring a gigantic shopping spree in which the wives of two local dignitaries along with a radio personality will shop for a 5-minute spree in Safeway. Each of them will attempt to get as many groceries as possible in the time allotted.

The groceries will be made into three food hampers and, until the end of October, all three will be on display and shoppers will be asked to buy tickets at $1.00 for three chances.

In excess of $5,000 is expected to be raised and all proceeds will go to the United Way campaign.

Triticale harvest well under way in Saskatchewan fields

Newsphoto libel suit dismissed

CALGARY (CP) — Frederick Brown's libel lawsuit against a city newspaper has been dismissed by a Court of Queen's Bench judge.

Mr. Justice Donald Medhurst said Brown did not establish during a day-long trial that he was the person shown in a page-one Calgary Albertan photograph June 17, 1977.

Brown, 53, claimed that the photograph and an accompanying article in the morning newspaper suggested to readers that he had committed criminal offences.

The photograph showed an unidentified man being handcuffed and led away by city police at a southwest Calgary shopping centre where eight people were injured in a shooting incident.

Brown testified he went to the scene after he looked out his apartment window and saw people milling about. He said he is trained in first aid and thought he might be able to assist if there had been a traffic accident or other calamity but police arrested him instead.

Police Sgt. George Whelpley said Brown was detained for being intoxicated in a public place after he refused to move away. He was released the next day.

Mr. Justice Medhurst said he agreed with Albertan counsel Neil McDermid that there was no evidence anyone reading the newspaper identified Brown as the unidentified man in the photograph. He said this was "fatal" to the lawsuit and it was therefore not necessary to decide whether the photograph and article were defamatory.

Tribble nibble versatile stuff

By LEO QUIGLEY
United Press Canada

If you're a Star Trek fan it won't be news to you that Tribbles eat triticale.

In fact, Canadians are now being introduced to such exotic products as triticale pancake mix, triticale muffins, triticale noodles, triticale breakfast cereal and, of course, tritcale bread and triticale crackers.

The reason I bring this up is because the Father of Triticale, Dr. Leonard Shebeski, Dean of Agriculture at the University of Manitoba, is retiring. He is the one who created something brand new on Mother Earth — a miracle grain that is bound to have a major role in feeding the world's hungry.

Triticale isn't a hybrid or improved variety of some old grain that's been around forever. It's a new species of life created in a laboratory — the test tube baby of the plant world.

Technically, it's a cross between wheat and rye. And, while consumers are just being introduced to triticale, western Canadian scientists have been working on this new species of grain for about 20 years.

The first big breakthrough in marketing came from food scientists at Christie Brown & Co. Ltd. (You know, the Mr. Christie who makes good cookies!). They spent a year in the firm's Toronto laboratory figuring out what could be done with Shebeski's miracle grain, and came up with a cracker.

Following this breakthrough was the triticale bun, developed by Buns Master Bakeries in Winnipeg, who served it to international delegates attending last September's World Cereal Congress in Winnipeg.

I don't know about the other people at the congress, but I for one couldn't keep my nose out of the bun basket. I've been hooked ever since — a true Canadian Tribble.

It's difficult to describe the flavor of triticale to anyone who hasn't tried it. The closest you can come is cracked wheat, but with an even nuttier flavor.

The popularity of triticale in Canada is demonstrated by the expanding acreage of this crop on the prairies. Larry Hector, president of Canadian Triticale Ltd. in Regina, estimates that about 10,000 acres are being grown under contract this year.

While Hector's firm is the main contracting company, Winnipeg-based Pioneer Grain has recently jumped into the business.

For farmers, triticale offers crop that does well on sandy soil and withstands heat and drought better than existing wheat varieties. Since it is grown under contract it also represents an immediate cash payment.

Most important, triticale can yield anywhere from 50 bushels an acre to 100 bushels or more on irrigated land, compared with an average of 25 to 30 bushels an acre for wheat.

For consumers who prowl supermarket aisles looking for new taste experiences, triticale offers more protein than wheat and a better quality protein (amino acids).

In short, it's very healthy stuff, with a protein content that can range as high as 20 percent. A large proportion of triticale sales are made through health food stores in the form of stone-ground flour.

Trekkies will remember that Tribbles are soft, cuddly, soothing creatures, traits that may or may not come from a triticale diet. But if they do, it's interesting to note that one of the largest expansions of triticale acreage has been in the USSR.

Anyone at the SALT talks interested in triticle buns?

Footnote: Don't look for triticale flakes on your supermarket shelves — yet. They're about to be introduced, though, and triticale muffins are on the drafting board.

Wins by a whisker

WINNIPEG (CP) — A court order forbidding Canada Safeway Ltd. to act against a bearded employee was issued Monday, one day before the worker was to be fired for refusing to shave.

Judge A.C. Hamilton of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench said the interim order will remain in force until he decides on a union request for an injunction blocking any company action until the matter is decided by arbitration.

The company suspended Winnipeg employee Dennis Last for three days Sept. 8 and told him he would be fired if he came to work today wearing a beard.

Last had shaved following a three-day suspension in June but let his beard grow a month later after an arbitration decision in the case of another Safeway worker that the company's no-beards policy was unreasonable.

Plants replacing animals in lab

LONDON (CP) — Animal lovers take heart: It may be possible to reduce the number of animals needed for laboratory tests by using plants instead.

A group of scientists now believe that enzymes obtained from laboratory animals could be replaced by similar enzymes found in plant roots. Enzymes are protein catalysts which play a large part in the chemistry of all living things.

Researchers from the pharmacology department of Edinburgh's Heriot-Watt University, Scotland, reported recently that the bean sprout offers promise in this direction.

The Scottish team's research is aimed ultimately at testing new anti-epilepsy drugs. Its leader, Prof. John Gilbert, says the bean sprout has been found to produce a type of enzyme that reacts to such drugs.

It occurred to the researchers that as the animal enzymes examined are particularly concerned with pumping chemical compounds through cells, similar enzymes involved in the pumping activities of plant roots might be equally effective in screening drugs. In this way, the long, complex process of operating on animal brains could be confined to fewer animals — with the subsequent saving in animal lives.

Porno lures S. Africans into Lesotho

MASERU, Lesotho (AP) — Every weekend, thousands of white South Africans pour into neighboring black countries to watch pornographic movies, play slot machines and drink on Sundays. They call it fun and the locals call them "dirty weekend brigades."

Lesotho, an independent black country completely surrounded by South Africa, is a haven for South Africans looking for entertainment of the type they can't get at home. The travellers also invade Botswana and Swaziland to escape the puritanical laws in their own countries.

Last weekend, about 1,500 persons, most of them from South Africa, paid up to $24 to watch 12 young women, wearing only smiles, compete in the Miss Body Beautiful contest here. It was treated as a gala affair.

South Africa, whose white settlers came from a stern, Calvinist heritage in Europe, has strict laws segregating races, prohibiting gambling, censoring films and books and limiting the hours for sales of alcohol. On Sundays, dancing and public entertainment are also prohibited.

"People come down here for something different," said Willem Nolte, who sells cars when he isn't promoting the Miss Body Beautiful contest with partner Solly Chesno, another South African.

"Not all South Africans are puritans. They stay in line back home because that's what everybody else is doing. Then, they break out and come to places like Lesotho, before going back to get into line again."

The modern Kingsway Cinema, the only movie theatre in the capital, has a seven-day-a-week schedule of movies running from morning until after midnight.

Deep Throat has been running almost a year along with other pornographic offerings, mostly attended by white South Africans.

The pornographic offerings come directly from New York and are uncensored but general features are cut.

"That's because we get them from South African distributors," explained the theatre manager, Gladys Sello. "The government censors there cut out the sexy parts."

At the Holiday Inn, where the lobby is wall-to-wall slot machines, white South Africans swarmed into a theatre where the body beautiful contest was staged.

Nolte, serving as master of ceremonies, introduced 12 young women taking part in the contest. All of them were South African. Two were colored, or mixed race. None was black. They first wore bikinis, then veils, then nothing.

"It was worth every cent," said one South African.

Nolte and Chesno are also planning something new for the weekend excursionists. "We hope to introduce topless wrestling," Nolte said.

30 YEARS AGO

Noronic fire is burned into memory

TORONTO (CP) — When the senior officer of the Toronto Harbor Police booked off sick Sept. 17, 1949, Ernest Norrey, patrol officer next in command, had no way of knowing it would cause him to be the first man on the scene of the worst holocaust in the city's history.

Thirty years ago this week, the Canada Steamship Lines cruise ship Noronic, advertised as Queen of the Great Lakes, burned in Toronto harbor, killing 119 people and injuring hundreds more.

The charred hulk, its deck plates melted, was still smoldering days later.

The 118-metre ship had put into Toronto from Detroit and Cleveland, where most of the passengers were from, about 7 p.m. Friday, Sept. 16. It was scheduled to leave Toronto on Saturday for the Thousand Islands, near Brockville, Ont., on its last cruise of the year.

Norrey, 67, now a harbor commission safety inspector, received a call from the harbor watchtower shortly after 2 a.m. reporting a red glow in the sky near the foot of Yonge Street.

He arrived in a patrol boat to find the Noronic in flames and people jumping over the side. He spent that night and most of the next day pulling people from the lake.

Flames climbed the decks

"By the time I got there, the flames were starting to climb from the first deck to the second deck and two people had jumped into the water," says Norrey.

"I had already called for police. By the time they got there I had 10 or 12 people in my boat and took them back to the station where they had blankets waiting and ambulances for anybody that was hurt."

Detectives Roy Soplet and Cyril Cole were the first policemen on the scene. Cole, 62, says he peeled off his clothes, dove into the water and began handing people to Soplet on the dock.

Ironically, Soplet and Cole had passed the $5 million ship earlier that night and discussed how beautiful it looked.

"We heard the music and were saying what a nice trip that would be with the music and dancing," recalled Soplet, 55, now a police inspector.

"We were on patrol, and shortly after 2.30 a.m. we looked south on Yonge Street, saw a glow in the sky and headed down. We were only a minute away when the alarm came in."

Within an hour the ship was a blazing inferno. An inquest later determined the fire had started in a linen closet, likely caused by careless smoking.

"The ship seemed ablaze from stem to stern," Soplet said. "The first thing we saw was a woman jumping off with her nightgown and hair on fire."

As the flames spread, Toronto began to resemble a city under siege. By 3 a.m. every hospital was jammed with victims and scores of taxis and ambulances operated a shuttle service to hospitals.

Within an hour the coroner's office was filled with bodies and Chief Coroner Dr. Shirle Lawson set up a temporary morgue in the horticultural building at the Canadian National Exhibition.

The task of identifying the bodies took months.

The Kingston, a passenger steamer moored in the next berth, was backed up to the Noronic and a plank was laid across for people to escape, but the vessel had to pull away when sparks from the blaze threatened to set it aflame.

Paint rolled off side of ship

"The paint was just rolling down the side of the ship," Norrey said.

"It was red hot, and a slight wind got up and gave the flames a kind of howl. There was a red glow in the sky I guess you could see for miles."

All the people jumping from the boat were in nightclothes and many were in a state of shock.

But only two people drowned escaping the Noronic. One was a woman who leaped between the boat and the dock and the other a man whose body was recovered days later.

The ship was carrying 522 passengers, only about 20 of them Canadians, and a crew of 173.

Flamboyant Dawson City is down but not out

By MARTHA COHN

DAWSON CITY (CP) — Dawson City may have lost its lusty opulence and flamboyance and empty buildings may stare out with blank eyes at dusty streets but the capital of the Yukon hasn't lost its Klondike spirit.

It stoically withstood two disasters in May and managed to have the welcome mats out for tourists in June as usual.

The first disaster was the worst flood in Dawson City's history, which occurred just after midnight May 3.

An ice jam on the neighboring Yukon River spilled water over a dike and inundated most of the town. No one drowned, but after the water submerged some buildings, filled most stores to a depth of 45 centimetres to more than one metre and drove inhabitants from their homes, it was trapped inside the dike and couldn't ebb away.

Andre Carrel, city manager, said Dawsonites were as indomitable as usual. "Some businesses were back in partial operation within 24 hours; within 72 hours we were self-sufficient again."

The biggest problem was too much outside help, he said.

"The response from the news reports was such that we really couldn't handle it. Phone calls came from British Columbia, Alberta, all over the Yukon, of course, and Alaska telling us about truckloads and planeloads of food and blankets ready to go . . . and there's only 800 people in town.

"Some stuff was headed off. The Good Samaritan approach shouldn't be taken advantage of. We told them to save their supplies for the next disaster."

Myrtle Morgan, owner of Black Mike's Innn, said, with true Yukon dislike of rules and regulations, that everyone helped one other, as they always had, and everyone was fine. She added that nothing would have gone right if they had all been organized and had had tried to follow evacuation plans.

In the midst of the disaster residents were still able to see humor in things.

Kathy Jones, director of the Dawson City Museum, said a friend of hers squelched home to survey the wreckage and carefully wiped his feet on the mat before stepping inside. When he opened the door several gallons of runny mud oozed out.

He noticed the phone was off the hook and put it to his ear just to see whether the phones were working, only to get a receiverfull of muddy water down his neck.

There was another report of someone's greenhouse sedately bobbing along with the fire inside still burning and keeping the tomatoes toasty.

Miss Jones said the museum was far enough back from the river that the only damage it suffered was having its elegant front steps floated 10 metres away. But many artifacts around town closer to the river were damaged or destroyed.

Carrel said about a dozen buildings were uprooted and relocated by the flood and many others shifted on their foundations.

No dollar estimate of the damage has been made yet, he said.

"It will take a while for foundation work to be finished and to relocate some of the major buildings that were moved. There's a shortage of equipment, such as jacks, and a shortage of manpower."

But to the eyes of a tourist the town looks remarkably undisturbed.

Carrel said the flood's impact on tourism was not as severe as that of the second disaster May 19, the burning of the D.C.W. Trading Post.

It was one of the two grocery stores in town and also the only hardware store. Police reports say the fire was caused by spontaneous combustion in the sawdust insulation, which was wet due to the flood.

The loss of the hardware section was particularly hard considering all the home repair work needed after the flood. Simple things such as sandpaper cannot be found in town.

The flood and the fire resulted in strange shortages, such as an absence of general cookbooks, boot oil, get-well cards, bandages and tape as well as magnets or cake pans.

The nearest city is Whitehorse, 530 kilometres south, and people are often forced to order items from there and wait until they arrive by truck.

The final headache that tried the Kondike spirit this summer was the revamping of the sewer and water system.

A booming black market for bighorns

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Federal and provincial officials, faced with staggering black-market prices for trophy sheep, have mounted a joint effort to prevent poaching and hunting out of season.

"It's like art," Bob Adams, an officer with the Alberta wildlife department, said of the prize bighorns. "Some people are willing to pay a lot and they don't care if they can't get it legally. They just want to get it any way they can."

Adams said he has heard reports that a trophy sheep can bring up to $15,000 on the illicit market.

The season for trophy sheep in Alberta opened in August and wardens in Banff National Park, where hunting is prohibited, have begun boundary patrols to ensure that overzealous hunters stay out of the wilderness preserve.

"The reason we're so concerned is that they are getting the prize animals," said Paul Kutzer of the Banff warden service. "They're going after the trophies, the best ones."

This can seriously affect the long-term strength of the herd, he said. It is more serious than the death toll from natural causes, which generally take the old and weak. Even animals killed on the highways are taken at random.

Chief Warden Andy Anderson said there is clear evidence of about three or four prize sheep killed annually in the park, but he suspects another 20-25 killings go undetected.

Some 900 sheep live in the park, but only a few are of the prize variety.

Anderson said about 100 sheep are killed legally on provincial land each year, with another 10-20 going illegally.

Federal officials have been patrolling on horseback, in helicopters and in some cases have patrolled jointly with provincial officials along park boundaries.

There are strict regulations governing hunting on provincial land, so provincial officials are also out in force.

Wardens have posted boundary signs, but Kutzer says it is up to hunters to know the locations of the protected areas, even if they are not posted.

Almost 3,300 charges are laid each year for violations of provincial regulations, but most are for relatively minor offences such as carrying a loaded weapon in a vehicle, failing to get permission to hunt on private land or not wearing proper protective clothing.

Most charges in the national park involve unsealed fire-arms, but some are for poaching.

Two years ago, a hunter was caught after he shot an elk in the Red Deer River region of the park.

"If someone is stupid enough to shoot an animal in the park, we seize everything used in the commission of the offence," said Kutzer.

In the 1977 case, wardens confiscated the man's truck. He lost the truck in the initial court case and had to pay more than $1,500 in fines.

It took him a year and the expense of an appeal court hearing to eventually retrieve the truck.

Streetcars staging revival

By ERIC HAMOVITCH

MONTREAL (CP) — "A man is like a streetcar," ran a saying among street-wise ladies of the 1930s. "You can catch one any time."

Men may still be easy to catch, but streetcars are mostly memories. Toronto streets still echo to the clanging of the trams, but in Montreal Aug. 30 marks the 20th anniversary of the day the last streetcars clattered through the city in a final farewell parade.

"The thinking then was that they were old-fashioned and blocked traffic," says Fred Angus, an amateur historian who has written a book on Montreal streetcars.

"After the war there was a sort of fetish for rubber-tired vehicles. It was thought that buses could weave in and out of traffic. People were educated to think streetcars were old-fashioned and had to be gotten rid of."

The post-war years saw a staggering growth in the number of private automobiles clogging the streets, and, silly as it seems today, the resulting traffic congestion was blamed largely on streetcars.

Streetcar: Mostly memories, but they may be coming back

Apart from Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa were the last Canadian cities to lose their streetcars — in 1959. They disappeared from Vancouver and Winnipeg in 1955, Calgary in 1950, Halifax in 1949, Quebec City and Saint John, N.B., in 1948, and from smaller cities before the Second World War.

"Toronto modernized its fleet after the war," Angus says. "Most other cities didn't . . . They chose buses."

Many trams from the 1910s or even earlier continued in service until the late '50s, grating along rusty rails, spitting sparks, straining up steep slopes and squealing around curves.

Now dubbed "light rail vehicles" by transit officials with a fondness for jargon, the electric streetcars found a way into people's hearts in a manner buses or subway trains can never hope to match.

"Flashbulbs went off for the last pictures," the Montreal Star said in a report on the farewell parade 20 years ago.

"For about seven miles, thousands lined the streets as a convoy of 15 old streetcars, dating right back to the first that ever trundled along the city's streets, moved in a slow parade along the tracks for the last time."

The crowds were dispersed by a sudden shower, but when the rain ended they returned thicker than before.

"The people were in the streets, in places 10 deep, to cheer and wave as the old cars passed by. One elderly woman, standing close to the tracks, put out her hand at each passing car and said, 'Goodbye, old car'."

J. P. St. Onge, a white-haired motorman with 42 years' service on streetcars, drove the last few miles of the parade with tears in his eyes, one account said. Former passengers applauded him from almost every intersection.

Nowadays, people have come to appreciate the quiet, energy-efficient service provided by streetcars.

In 1976, Edmonton opened a line served by "light rail vehicles" with mechanical innards remarkably similar to those in the trams that plied the streets of that city more than half a century ago. Calgary will follow soon, and Toronto is taking delivery of 196 new streetcars.

In Montreal, transit chief Lawrence Hanigan says it's possible trams could make a comeback, running on reserved rights-of-way in suburban areas where extending the subway would be too costly.

In the United States, San Francisco and Boston are getting new streetcars, to be followed by Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Buffalo and San Diego. One line in New Orleans has run continuously since 1835 and may be the oldest tram line in the world.

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

The backbone of good defense is partnership cooperation. The defenders generally start the play knowing little about their combined resources, but from that point on they exchange as much information as possible to reveal declarer's cards and so get the most out of their own.

Their basic aim in most deals is to defeat the contract, and all their plays are geared to that goal. If a defender happens to make an unusual play, his partner is expected to grasp its meaning.

Here is a typical case. West leads the king of diamonds and East signals for a continuation by playing the nine. West does not have to obey the signal if he thinks a contiuation may be harmful, and, in the actual case, West switches to a club. He hopes to get a club ruff, either immediately or later, and so gain a trick for the defense.

Declarer wins in dummy and leads a trump to the king. West ducks the king but takes the next trump with the ace as East discards a low diamond.

Now West plays a low diamond to the ace and East — if he has faith in partner and realizes why West played a club at trick two — returns a club for West to ruff. As a result, South goes down one.

But note that if West blindly obeys East's diamond signal at trick one and continues the suit, or if East fails to appreciate the import of the club switch at trick two, South makes four hearts doubled.

It is of course tempting for East to play the ace of spades upon winning the ace of diamonds, but, if he did that, South would ruff and make the contract. Instead, East should demonstrate his confidence in partner by returning a club at trick six.

"Doug? That's my son," said Harry. "I think you met him at the cottage a few years ago."

Ron nodded. "Of course I did, but he's grown a lot since then. How old is the boy now?"

Harry thought a moment. "Well, there's a teaser for you," he replied. "If you multiply my age by his you get one less than six times their sum."

How old was Doug?

U.K. MPs back Indian issues in Canada

MONTREAL (CP) — British MPs will "embarrass the hell out of the Canadian government" if it tries to bring home the British North America Act, the constitution, without safeguarding Indian rights, says Labor MP Bruce George.

"Plenty of MPs were amazed to find that England still has responsibility over treaties signed with the Indians," George said Tuesday in an interview.

"We didn't ask for that responsibility," he added. "It was handed down ... and many MPs are prepared to make a stink over it."

Most of the treaties involving Indians were agreements between the British government and Indian nations before Confederation.

The contract between the Indians and the British government was altered by transferring jurisdiction of Indians and Indian lands to Canada in 1867 without the consent of native peoples, George said.

The BNA act is British legislation and patriation of the Canadian constitution can take place only by an act of British Parliament.

George and Lord Grey were here as guests at the National Indian Brotherhood's annual meeting. The brotherhood represents the country's 300,000 status Indians who receive benefits under federal legislation.

"I'm treading a knife edge," George said. "I'm not going to interfere in Canadian politics and presumably the Indians and the (Canadian) government will agree on a constitutional package."

Indians and other native groups, which total about 1.5 million people, have rejected the two—nations founding theory in Canada and want direct participation in constitutional talks.

The Progressive Conservative government recently announced that native groups, which had previously been held to observer status, would have increased participation but refused to elaborate on the mechanism.

But that move came after 250 Indian chiefs made the much—publicized trip to England in July to ask the Queen and the British government to block patriation of the constitution.

The Queen, on advice from the Canadian cabinet, refused to meet the Indian delegation but the chiefs were officially received by British MPs and representatives from the House of Lords.

Parliamentary facilities were used for news conferences and meetings were arranged with various political leaders

"The Indians now have lots of goodwill in the United Kingdom," George said.

Noel Starblanket, brotherhood president, told the annual meeting that "we did meet with the people who hold the real power."

"We laid the foundation for continuing liaison with these important men and women on Indian constitutional ights."

Starblanket said a delegation of brotherhood executives will return toLondon this fall to "maintain their level of awareness."

50¢ per gallon hike for fuel?

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Gasoline and other petroleum products would cost 40 cents to 50 cents a gallon more in Canada if the domestic price of crude oil was raised immediately to world price levels, British Columbia's energy minister said Tuesday.

Jim Hewitt, speaking at a conference on coal, said the price hike also would provide a five-to-six-per-cent jump in the inflation rate, increased unemployment and "multi-billion dollar transfers of income from oil consumers and consuming provinces to oil producers and the Alberta treasury chiefly."

However, said Hewitt, there is no alternative to increasing the domestic price of crude oil from its current domestic price of $13.75 a barrel, which is $10 to $12 a barrel less than the price of foreign crude delivered to Eastern Canada.

"We don't have the oil productive base to sustain the gap (between the two prices), and we are unlikely to develop a strong enough oil productive base without narrowing the gap."

)He said the only question is when the higher prices will be phased in.

Hewitt said the higher prices will encourage development of new resources, provide incentives to cut consumption and hasten development of other energy sources.

He said B.C. is a substantial energy producer but does not produce enough to meet its needs.

"Alberta and Saskatchewan are the only Canadian provinces in an overall energy surplus situation," he said.

But he said he foresees a a one-third reduction in the growth rate of energy demands because of the higher costs, more efficient use of available fuels and slower population and economic growth.

"The worrisome prospect (in B.C.) is our steadily increasing dependence on outside sources of oil which will take us from our current 75 per cent impact dependence to 85 to 90 per cent by the mid-1980s," he said.

Canadian flyers leave Mideast

OTTAWA (CP) — Five years of Canadian air operations in the Middle East in support of United Nations peacekeeping ends today as the Canadian contingent of the 116 Transport Unit head home from El Galla on the Suez Canal.

The 47 members of the 73rd Canadian Service Battalion who fly and service two CC-115 Buffalo aircraft were stationed with an Australian helicopter unit.

A defence spokesman said the withdrawal is part of the windup of the UN Middle East peacekeeping force. Its mandate expired July 24 following the Egyptian-Israeli peace accord.

He said the return of the air transport unit means half the 850 Canadians serving in the Middle East will be home. The others are expected home by the end of October.

2 stabbed, shot

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — Police said today they picked up a suspect overnight for questioning in a shooting and stabbing incident involving two women Tuesday.

There were no further details except that the suspect had been picked up within the uptown area of the city.

Earlier, police had launched an extensive search for a man they said appeared to be in his 30s who carried out the attack.

They said the man, wielding a rifle and a knife, shot and stabbed the two women as they picked berries at Rockwood Park Tuesday afternoon.

Heavily armed police sealed off the 2,000-acre park and a helicopter and tracking dog were brought in.

The women are listed in stable condition in hospital.

They were identified as Rae Patterson, 39, and Judith James, 36, both of Saint John. Both suffered stab and gunshot wounds.

They get their man

OTTAWA (CP) — Several Ottawa lawyers say women RCMP undercover agents are using their wiles to entice men into selling them drugs.

And they say the definition of entrapment should be broadened by the federal government to eliminate such tactics.

Lawyer Don Bayne says the women are usually young and attractive and their appearance is as much a factor in their assignments as their police experience.

Leonard Shore said the time spent catching minor offenders is a waste of manpower.

For example, a young man who goes to a pub with a small amount of marijuana may really have no intention of selling any, but might be persuaded to change his mind if asked by a friendly young woman, he said.

A spokesman for the RCMP declined comment on women as undercover agents other than to say male and female agents operate the same way.

Lawyer Ken Hall agreed in part, but added: "I guess they do the same job as the male undercover agents, but when a nice-looking girl asks you for some drugs, it's different."

Apology for Rene

MONTREAL (CP) — Solange Chaput-Rolland, the Liberal party candidate in the Prevost provincial byelection, says several members of the Parti Quebecois have called her to apologize for a recent verbal attack made against her by Premier Rene Levesque.

During a speech to a PQ nomination meeting last Sunday, Levesque referred to Mrs. Chaput-Rolland as the "champion of the 'fesses-serrees' federalists," an expression that translates roughly as "uptight" or "tight-assed.

"I was a little suprised by his tone," Mrs. Chaput-Rolland said in an interview Tuesday. "But I don't think that elections can be won by that kind of rhetoric.

"I don't intend to reply to that kind of attack," she added.

Mrs. Chaput-Rolland said she expects a tough but clean fight against Pierre Harvey, the 52-year-old economist who won the hotly-contested PQ nomination on Sunday.

She said she will fight the byelection, one of three scheduled for November, on local issues and against the PQ's sovereignty-association proposal.

But she warned against interpreting the election outcome as a sure indicator of next spring's referendum result.

"A lot of people will vote for me because I am Solange rather than because I am a Liberal or a federalist," she said.

Doctors flee Canada

TORONTO (CP) — At least 663 medical doctors and possibly 800 left Canada last year for greener pastures in the United States and elsewhere, figures included in a newsletter published by the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges show.

Dr. Douglas Waugh, the association's executive secretary, said Tuesday that the exodus, together with the number of doctors opting out of public health insurance plans across the country or moving to extra billing, indicates discontent with the present medicare system.

Waugh, a former dean of medicine at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., said Canada has become an exporter of doctors at $150,000 a shot — the cost to the public in training one physician.

And W. A. Mennie, a federal statistician in the health and welfare department, says in his newsletter article that doctors immigrating to Canada dropped to 263 last year from 1,170 in 1973.

Both Waugh and Dr. Douglas Caldwell, president of the Ontario Medical Association, said that to the best of their knowledge as many doctors are leaving from the large cities as from remote areas.

Waugh said last year that Canada's 16 medical schools graduated about 1,700 doctors. Those, combined with the 263 who immigrated here, produce a gain of about 2,000, compared with the 800 who left, for a net gain of 1,200.

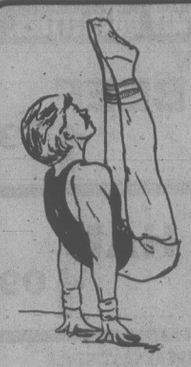

Mennie's study shows that a large proportion of the emigrating doctors are between 35 and 50 years old.

But Caldwell said one young graduate told him that about half of the 1980 graduating class at the University of Toronto planned to write U.S. exams right after they finish their university finals.

Herbicide spray nets $100M suit

AUGUSTA, Me. (AP) — Gardeners in Washington County whose vegetables were poisoned by drifting herbicides this summer have filed a $100 million class action suit against St. Regis Paper Co. and a Bangor helicopter company.

The spray involved reportedly was Tordon 101.

Judy LaMarsh salts wit with venom

Targets for her wit included Prime Minister Joe Clark, Alberta's oil wealth, Quebec separatism and Canada-United States relations.

She also took the chance to promote John Turner as a possible savior of the Liberal party and compared him to Senator Edward Kennedy in the U.S.

"If Kennedy makes it, Turner will make it," she told a mainly American audience attending the Northwest Electric Power and Light Association.

And "Joe Who — the man who backs into bayonets" was likened to a bumbling Gerald Ford.

Miss LaMarsh, 54, noted the new government elected last May has hardly been heard from since, except on the issue of Canada proposing to move its Israeli embassy to Jerusalum from Tel Aviv.

She said the proposal was an election ploy to gain Jewish votes in Toronto. Unfortunately, she said, it was one promise that was not forgotten and was costing Canadians precious ties with the Arabs.

Taking a jab at Clark's election promise to dismantle Petro-Canada, Miss LaMarsh said the Crown-owned oil company's Calgary headquarters was Red Square and joked that the best solution to both problems would be to move the Petro-Canada building to Jerusalem.

She also spoke of the battle in the U.S. 100 years ago on whether to set slaves free.

"Canada has got the province of Quebec — and we are not going to let them free. We also have Alberta, and we are damn well not going to let them free either."

She hoped the problem could be solved within a year or two.

"Then we can deal with how to make Albertans Canadians."

Miss LaMarsh also spoke on the ups and downs of Canada-U.S. relations, referring to Canada's victory in the War of 1812.

She hoped the U.S. would not decide to attack again.

"Our army has reached such figures that a quarter of it is women who are not allowed to carry arms. We would have to seduce you to win the battle."

Ministers seek better funding for the arts

ST. ANDREWS, N.B. (CP) — A study group of provincial deputy ministers of culture to recommend ways of alleviating the funding crisis in the arts was established Tuesday at a conference of provincial ministers of culture.

The ministers announced at the conclusion of their two-day conference that the deputy minsters will meet in Quebec Oct. 4 to examine the problem and recommend solutions.

Secretary of State David MacDonald said the federal government will also participate in the Quebec meeting.

The ministers agreed that new provincial and federal fiscal arrangements are necessary to relieve the financial strains already apparent in the arts community.

The study group will also explore ways of expanding and diversifying the private and corporate assistance already being given to the arts.

The ministers also endorsed a proposal by Quebec Cultural Affairs Minister Denis Vaugeois that the provinces should have primary jurisdiction over their own cultural development.

MacDonald commited federal agencies under his control to greater co-operation with the provinces in making decisions.

"People assumed there were mechanisms for consultation in place and there weren't," he said.

The minister also assured the provinces that the new federal government recognizes its responsibility to support and enhance "a sense of community which local art activity gives."

Provincial ministries would be given far greater influence in the decisions made by the secretary of state's department, MacDonald promised.

'Sex atrocity' gets life term

CALGARY (CP) — A former prison guard convicted and sentenced Tuesday to life imprisonment for the kidnapping and castrating of a school teacher said he could not excuse his crime, but pleaded with Mr. Justice Virgil Moshansky for a chance to lead a normal life.

"It makes me ill to think I could have done something like that," said Roy Frederick Mund, 28, of Calgary. "There's nothing I can say or excuse I can make to justify what happened. All I ask is a chance to lead a decent and normal life."

Mund, who had been a guard at the Calgary remand centre, was sentenced in court of Queen's bench to life imprisonment, the maximum penalty for kidnapping, and also to 14 years, the maximum term for wounding.

Mund sat with his head down as the judge termed the attack a crime without precedent in Canada. It was, he said, "a sexual atrocity of unbelievable cruelty," which reeks of sadism.

The teacher, whose name was never released, had been found dazed and bleeding on a Calgary street the morning of June 20, 1978.

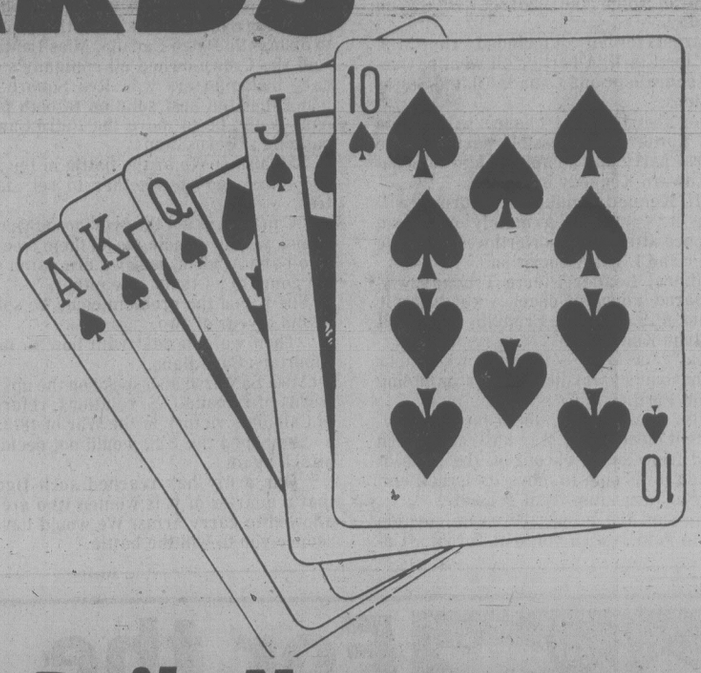

He said he had gone drinking the previous evening, blacked out and then woke up in the station wagon of a man who said he was a police officer.

The man, whom the teacher could not identify, promised to take him home.

Native health plan set

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister David Crombie announced a new federal policy today for Indian health which removes tighter rules introduced last year by the former Liberal government for some health benefits.

Crombie's announcement came in a telegram to the National Indian Brotherhood meeting in Montreal.

The policy, approved Tuesday by cabinet, withdraws guides set last fall for uninsured health services such as eye care, dental work, drugs and transportation.

Former health minister Monique Begin had said the rules — set last year and temporarily suspended because of heavy protest — meant the federal government would pay the cost of the services only for those Indians who could not afford them.

The guides were originally set up to help contain soaring costs for those services.

Crombie also said the federal government plans closer consultations with Indian organizations including national and provincial associations and bands as well as provincial governments.

He said $950,000 has been set aside so 600 Indian reserve band councils can meet twice yearly with federal and provincial leaders.

"The policy emphasizes increased participation of Indian bands in health-care delivery, where sought by chief and council and provides for close consultations at band, provincial and national levels on health programs, finances and allocation of resources."

However, Crombie said the federal government will maintain its traditional policy of providing services for registered Indians living only on reserves unless they are denied support elsewhere.

"With respect to registered Indians residing permanently off-reserve, the policy reiterates that they should receive health services from the province or municipality of residence.

"But if such services are denied, the federal government will attempt to ensure their provision."

Earlier this week provincial health ministers challenged Crombie to resolve what they called the chaotic jurisdictional system of health services for natives.

Robert McClelland, British Columbia health minister, and Denis Lazure, Quebec social affairs minister, recommended the government turn over the responsibility and federal funds now used for native services to the provinces.

Currently the federal budget for Indian and northern health services exceeds $100 million a year.

Shoyama quits AEC post

Prime Minister Clark's office said today that Shoyama said in a letter that he would like to step down as head of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and as special adviser to the government on constitutional economics either at the end of this month or at the end of October, whichever is most convenient.

A spokesman said the government has accepted that the 63-year-old veteran public servant is leaving but the date has not been decided.

The spokesman said that Shoyama, former deputy minister of finance, wanted to leave before the May 22 election but then prime minister Pierre Trudeau asked him to stay on.

Clark also asked him to remain after he took over the prime minister's office.

"There is no acrimony as far as I know," the spokesman said.

Despite the fact Shoyama was influential during the Liberal government, he was not on any Conservative hit list.

The Kamloops, B.C., native was secretary of the cabinet under the New Democratic Party government of Saskatchewan until 1964 when he came to Ottawa with the Economic Council of Canada. He joined the finance department in 1968, was made deputy energy minister in 1974 and finance deputy a year later. He was named top public servant in 1978.

His departure gives the Conservative government more scope to change to public service. Already some top public servants have been dismissed while others have been shifted.

Canadians more optimistic

TORONTO (CP) — A Gallup poll made public today shows that 44 per cent of Canadians think the country is heading for a depression — a more optimistic attitude than when the same survey was taken five years ago.

In 1974, response to the same question showed 51 per cent expected a depression.

Those living in professional and executive households are much more optimistic about economic prospects today than are other Canadians, the poll showed.

Chrysler aid up to U.S.

WASHINGTON (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie said today the government won't make any agreement to help the Canadian subsidiary of financially ailing Chrysler Corp. before it finds out what aid is being provided to the U.S. parent company.

Following a one-hour meeting here with Treasury Secretary William Miller, Crosbie said Chrysler's situation is a matter of joint concern and the two governments will keep in close touch on it.

Chrysler has requested $1.2 billion in loan guarantees from the U.S. government, a request that Miller describes as too much. Chrysler Canada Ltd. has also approached the Canadian government with undisclosed requests for financial help.

Crosbie said in his meeting with Miller he discussed U.S. economic prospects for the next year.

Emphasizing the close ties between the Canadian and U.S. economies, Crosbie said it is obvious Canada will "follow the U.S. pattern" — which means riding out current problems of high inflation and weak economic growth.

"There is no room to take stimulative action," Crosbie said, because of Canada's big budgetary deficit and its deficit on trade in goods and services with other countries. But he said Miller anticipates the U.S. economy will begin coming out of its current recession about the middle of next year.

Crosbie refused to predict the effect on Canadian interest rates from a fresh round of U.S. increases expected to follow from a Tuesday announcement that the U.S. discount rate is rising to a record 11 per cent.

Pranks but no thanks

CALGARY (CP) — A prank organization offering a dubious welcome to Asian immigrants has resurfaced here with the arrival of the southeast Asian refugees.

At least two southern Alberta families have reported receiving a letter informing them they have been chosen to play host to a Vietnamese family — but the return address given does not exist.

The letter is similar to one sent to an unknown number of Calgary and area resident several years ago in a previous surge of Asian immigration. The letter, postmarked in Calgary and claiming to come from the "Province of Alberta Ministry of Health" informs recipients they have been selected to participate in a new program.

"You will be pleased . . . to learn that we have assigned a typical group from Vietnam to be guests in your home for the next few months," the letter says. "Your family will consist of the father, mother, four children, wife's brother, husband's grandmother and her sister."

June Robinson of Stavely received a copy of the letter and contacted immigration officials, who acknowledged it was a prank.

Terming such letters "garbage," Mrs. Robinson said another family in Stavely also received a copy.

She said an immigration official told her it is likely the writer of the letters is acquainted with the persons who receive them.

Computerized patrol cars year away

Chief Bob Peterson of Saanich said Tuesday he is interested in the Vancouver innovation but said costs preclude his force following suit at present.

The terminals, which are plugged into the Canadian Police Information Computer or CPIC, a nation-wide information retrieval system centered in Ottawa, allow officers to make checks of vehicles or people on the street.

Officers no longer have to radio the information to the station and have someone else make the checks.

The installation of the mobile terminals is only one aspect of a major reorganization of the Vancouver police's information gathering system.

Called the police index enquiries systems or PIES for short, it is expected to cost $1 million.

But Peterson said it will take several more months before an acceptable plan is worked out.

He said some features of PIES may be incorporated, but it is still too early to tell.

$150,000 for artists

The B.C. Cultural Fund has awarded more than $150,000 to 189 young British Columbian artists and performers.

Nazi killer shot in turn

MOSCOW (Reuter) — A Soviet woman convicted of machine-gunning civilians during the Nazi occupation of the Second World War has been executed by firing squad, informed sources said Tuesday.

Antonina Makarova was sentenced to death earlier this year by a court in Bryansk, western Russia, after she was found guilty of taking part in a Nazi firing squad which performed its duties at nearby Lokot.

Pravda said Makarova, a grandmother, was tried after 32 years of married life during which she did not tell her husband about her wartime activities.

Ike's secrets come to light

HOUSTON (AP) — A historian has reported finding a secret diary kept by former U.S. president Dwight Eisenhower during the early years of the Second World War and preserved despite an order that it be destroyed and that it "must not ... be seen by anyone."

The typed copy of the 1941-42 notes reveals some of Eisenhower's private feelings about his superiors and his fellow generals, Rice University historian Francis Loewenheim wrote in a two-part copyright series in the Houston Chronicle.

Fran Lubens admits she's sentimental — that's why she has a carpenter fitting large portions of her childhood home in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, into her new home in Dayton, Ohio. Two fireplaces, an oak staircase, doors and windows were taken from the 100-year-old home. "I'm a very sentimental person," said Lubens, who moved away from the home when she married 33 years ago.

Television talk-show host Johnny Carson hates crowds and queues at hotels when he's on the road — so he places classified ads, in advance of his visits, seeking a houses to rent. In Framingham, Mass., where he is to play soon, Carson's current ad says he will pay $1,000 for five days — provided the house is on an acre of land; has luxurious furnishings; has four or more bedrooms; three or more bathrooms; a tennis court; possibly a heated pool and is within 30 minutes of town.

The U.S. government has come up with a $33 billion plan for a mobile-missile system in which missles would be moved frequently from one place to another. But humorist Art Buchwald in a speech in Albany said "all we have to do is give the Soviet Union a train schedule, and they'll never find them."

Two East German families who made the perilous flight to freedom aboard a hot air balloon have been paid $50,000 by a West German magazine for their story and four bank accounts have been set up to take other money pouring in from people eager to help them adjust to their new life. The flight has made overnight celebrities of aircraft mechanic Hans-Peter Strelzik, 31, bricklayer Guenter Wetzel, 24, their wives and four sons. They have also been offered apartments, jobs — and the Red Cross barracks they are staying in has piled up with shoes, clothing, toys and flowers.

Today Sally Thompson — once one of Hugh Hefner's favorite bunnies — is now selling real estate in Toronto. Her co-workers call the 33-year-old Oshawa native and former Grade 3 teacher "the million dollar bunny" because in just over a year she's sold nearly $1 million in houses.

Dear Abby:

Don't back down! You were not wrong when you advised your readers to 'consult a lawyer, and pay him for what he knows.' he and him become personal pronouns when referring to both sexes.

Please inform Mandy Stellman of Montreal and Ms. Perlman of St. Thomas, who should not object to being known as Mandy Stell — and Ms. Perl — after removing the 'man' from their names, that the old rule still holds.

So don't apologize, Abby. We appreciate the fine lawyers, doctors, clergy and those in other vocations who are of the fairer sex, but let's not bend over backwards to distinguish whether he has acquired a 5 o'clock shadow, or a shiny nose just before dinner.

George Bowen

Dear George:

I cannot tell a lie. I find it a nuisance to write 'he-she' and 'him-her.' And I abhor that new style journalism that refers to women by their last names. I find myself backing up to re-read entire paragraphs in order to find out if the "Fonda' is Jane or Henry!

Dear Abby:

I am being married in six weeks, and everything would be perfect if it weren't for the way my mother feels about my fiance. She keeps telling me it's still not too late to change my mind even though she knows how much I love Ron. (He's 26 and I'm 24.)

He's a wonderful person and I have never loved anyone the way I love him, but Mom thinks I deserve a better-looking man. Can you believe it, Abby? I've gone with some gorgeous men, but they were all so in love with themselves that they couldn't love anyone else.

I am no beauty, but my mother thinks I am. I am happy with what I have, but my mother is making me miserable. I can't take much more of her hassling. What should I do?

Unhappy

Dear Unhappy:

Tune mother out when she puts down Ron. She's wrong, of course. Handsome is as handsome does.

Dear Abby:

Someone who had worked in a government agency for 15 years wrote to say that the average person is an 'idiot.' To support that statement the writer explained that a woman was given an employment form to fill out. One of the routine questions was 'Sex?' In response to that question, she wrote, 'I don't care for it much anymore.'

Well, I'd like to offer a similar experience. I am a room clerk in a first-class hotel. On our hotel registry is the question, 'Firm?'

After one very attractive young woman had registered, I carefully read the form she had filled out. In the space following 'Firm?' she had written, 'Very!'

Cook up a vat of tomato sauce to use and save for future spaghetti feeds

Spaghetti with integrity easy, easy and...easy

By MIKE McGRADY

We begin with spaghetti because it is easy, because it allows for improvisation, because it is easy, because everyone likes it and, above all else because it is easy.

The Staples: Make sure that these are on hand: salt, pepper, basil, oregano, thyme, butter, olive oil, garlic, vinegar.

The Shopping List: One pound of spaghetti, one pound ground beef, one large can (Italian plum if possible) tomatoes, one small can tomato paste, crackers, Chianti wine. And these vegetables: two large onions, two green peppers, one bunch celery, one head lettuce and one-half pound mushrooms. Also, two cheeses—one half-pound of parmesan and a half-pound of brie. This should be enough for a family of five.

4 PM: This first day we start early, allowing time to recover from small disasters along the way. An adequate spaghetti sauce can be prepared in less than an hour but today's extra simmering time will only improve it. (Now that fresh tomatoes are at their peak, perhaps you can make up a huge vat of tomato sauce as base for future needs, and put it in the freezer.)

Put a half-stick of butter and a splash of olive oil into a large saucepan over medium heat. When the butter has melted, add the thinly sliced onions and green peppers. (Save some of each for your salad.) Slice two celery stalks and add them. Peel and mince two cloves of garlic and sprinkle over the mixture. (Danger! A clove of garlic is not be confused with the large bulb of garlic. Not ever.)

Stir with a wooden spoon. Other spoons may be used in an emerganecy but wooden spoons will lend you a deceptively professional air. In a short time—10 minutes or so—the onions will turn golden brown at the edges. (Danger! If they turn golden-black at the edges, turn down the heat at once.) Add the sliced mushrooms, cook for a few minutes, then turn off the heat.

4:25 PM: In a separate pan cook the ground beef over medium heat, breaking it into small chunks. When meat is brown throughout, pour off the fat (Danger! Not in the sink!) and add the meat to the vegetables, again over a medium heat.

4:30 PM: Stir in the canned tomatoes, the tomato paste and the spices. The seasonings might include a large pinch of basil, another large pinch of oregano, a small pinch of thyme and some salt and pepper. Trust your taste buds. Many other seasonings ca be added—a bay leaf, a few cloves, a few sprigs of parsley, some cayenne pepper. This is, in fact, a dish that invites experimentation. Any number of vegetables will enrich the sauce. Egglant, zucchini, chopped carrots—you name it. Aand should the sauce be too thick, it can be thinned with consomme, tomato juice, water or wine.

When sauce is well heated, reduce to lowest point, cover pan and allow mixture to simmer gently. Stir the sauce occasionally. (Danger! If mixture shows signs of sticking to pot, heat is too high.)

Take a little breather. Read the paper. Sample the Chianti. (One can't be too careful about these things.) Carry on a relaxed conversation with your partner, who is apt to be looking into the kitchen somewhat nervously.

5:40 PM: Start water boiling in the largest pot you can find.

6 PM: Make the spaghetti according to box directions. While water is boiling you can put together the salad. Chop up a couple of stalks of celery and add that to the leftover slices of pepper and onion. Rinse the lettuce free of sand. Pat it dry with paper towels and break it into bite-sized pieces. The salad dressing, three parts oil and one part vinegar, is kept to the side until ready to serve.

6:15 PM: There are many ways to determine when the spaghetti is ready. In ancient times, cooks supposedly removed a single strand from the boiling water and threw it against the ceiling; if it stuck up there, it was done. (Danger! If there are no old spaghetti strands on the ceiling, don't try this method.) An alternate method is to simply taste the spaghetti; is should be chewy not tough—al dente.

As the pasta completes its boil, grate the parmesan cheese and put it in a small serving bowl. The salad dressing is mixed and poured over the greens and the salad is tossed lightly. The spaghetti is taken from the pot, strained, placed on a serving platter and the sauce is draped artfully over it. Hold the brie and crackers for a final course.

As the family digs in, you pour the Chianti. This is one time your partner won't ask you what the celebration is. This time they'll know.

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Overweight and obesity dominate the lives of hundreds of thousands of people across Canada. So concentrated are the efforts on dieting that more than millions of dollars are spent each year on weight control. This includes drugs, exercise apparatus, health clubs and spas, books on dieting and massage.

The most common questions asked about this major health-and-happiness problem are:

Q. How does "overweight" differ from "obesity"?

A. Most people who are markedly overweight can be said to be obese. From a medical and technical point of view, there are height and weight tables which give a good index of obesity. When there is a large accumulation of fat underneath the skin in an overwight person, he is considered to be obese.

Q. What are the major Dangers of obesity?

A. Excess weight puts a tremendous strain on the heart and lungs. People who carry the burden of 25 to 50 lbs. of extra weight have a layer of fat surrounding their heart which interferes with its function and with its reserve. Can one really conceive of the fatigue in the body of a person who, from the moment he arises until he goes to bed, is carrying a sack of potatoes weighing that much?

The entire cardiovascular system is distressed by this additional weight. The longevity of the fat person is reduced by the increased possibility of heart attack, stroke and high blood pressure.

Arterosclerosis and diabetes are additonal threats to the obese.

Q. How many calories are lost by vigorous exercise?

A. That depends on the kind of exercise and the time spent exercising. Riding a bicycle, swimming, or playing tennis can burn off about 500 calories an hour. Walking briskly or playing golf can burn up about 300 calories in an hour. Jogging can burn off about 700 calories in an hour. Just remember that many people who exercise become very hungry and can replace the lost calories quickly when they settle down.

Q. Why are crash diets almost always a failure?

A. Crash diets, as the name implies, have a sense of immediacy and urgency. The weight loss is almost always short-lived because there is no long-sustained change of habit that adheres to this simple axiom: Sensible dieting must be a lifetime habit if it is to be effective. Another axiom of successful weight reduction is inescapable: If the number of calories you eat or drink are more than the calories you expend in the day's activity you will gain weight — unless there is some rare metabolical dysfunction.

"Why are you such a messy eater?"

Vegetable sugars keep baked goods healthful

hilda beastall

Carrots in cookies for lunch boxes will be favorites at first bite. With other ingredients they develop a pleasant texture and their natural sugars help in cutting down on commercial sugar while gaining a longer lasting reserve of energy.

Dried fruits seem a natural partner for grated carrots in baked goods. We know how well the combination works in Christmas puddings and cakes.

Here is a recipe which I worked out after reading the Carrot Cookbook by Ann Saling of Edmonds, Washington. Published in late 1975, it opened up a previously unexplored view on possibilities of carrot uses when surpluses occur in late summer or when vegetable cooking in general may run into a winter depression.

FRUIT SLICES

- 1 cup cut-up dates
- 1 cup grated or shredded carrots
- 2 Tbsp. brown sugar
- 1 cup orange juice, fresh OR reconstituted from frozen
- ¾ cup soft margarine
- ¼ cup brown sugar
- 1 cup wholewheat flour
- ¼ cup wheat germ
- 1¾ cups oat flakes
- ½ tsp. baking soda
- ½ tsp. salt
- ½ cup ground sunflower seeds

Cook together dates, carrots, first amount of sugar, orange juice, until thickened, about 10 minutes. Set aside to cool. (Can be done the day before and put into refrigerator in pan overnight; to cut time).

Cream margarine and ¼ cup brown sugar in mixing bowl. Measure remaining dry ingredients into small bowl, mix in sunflower seeds. Add to creamed mixture to make crumby texture.

Fruit slices and milk — the ideal snack

Spread half the crumbs on bottom and sides of a lightly greased 8 by 8-inch pan, pressing smoothly into place with spoon.

Spoon the cooled fruit mixture evenly on top; cover with remaining crumb mixture, pressed down a little with back of spoon. If desired, keep a little of the fruit mixture aside to taste as a salad dressing by adding it to a quarter cup of homemade yogurt. Delicious too.

Bake the slices in moderate oven 177 Deg. C for 30 minutes, or until a pale brown. Cool in the pan; cut into slices but leave until cold. Makes about 24 pieces according to size.

Carrots can be used as a mild fruit ingredient for wholewheat buns as a surprise in lunch boxes. They will be a good color but scarcely noticeable as to containing carrots.

CARROT BISCUITS

- 1 cup warm water
- ½ tsp. sugar
- 1 Tbsp. (1 pkt.) dry yeast
- 2 Tbsp. soft margarine (softened)
- 2 tsp. sugar.
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1 small egg
- 1 cup finely grated carrot
- 2 cups wholewheat flour
- ¼ cup skim milk powder
- ½ cup unbleached flour (Approx.)

Into large warm mixing bowl, measure warm water and first amount of sugar. Sprinkle yeast over surface and let stand 10 minutes.

Meanwhile soften margarine in small warm bowl; grate carrot finely into margarine. Add second amount sugar, salt, and egg. Beat altogether with fork.

Now begin adding wholewheat flour with some unbleached and the milk powder mixed in.

Continue beating as long as possible; then continue stirring in enough unbleached flour until a soft dough is formed.

Grease 12 muffin pans; lightly dust with flour. Fill each with a spoonful of dough lightly rounded up with a little extra flour. Now without previous rising, put the pans of buns into a cold oven to begin rising; turn heat indicator to a low 95 Deg. F for 10 minutes; then turn off heat. Leave buns in oven to rise to about double size.

When about double, turn heat indicator up to fairly hot 400 Deg. F to stop the rising and begin baking. After 10 minutes, turn heat down to moderate 177 Deg. C to finish baking in about another 10 minutes.

Remove from pans and cool on wire rack for lunch boxes or serve hot with cold suppers as a special treat. Make 12 or 14 buns.

My chief taster has been enjoying the test batch with last week's test jar of the wartime Ruby Jam or Conserve made with carrots and beets. They seem to go with anything and everything that is served.

The Carrot Buns take only just over an hour to make from the time you begin putting ingredients together until they are taken from the oven. In between are several minutes free for preparing other parts of the meal.

These two recipes are only suggestions for readers to work on. Both are delicious, containing nutritious ingredients.

Another vegetable to use for the buns could be the large sweet onions that have recently been taken from garden and allotment for winter storing.

Even the Fruit Slices could be turned into Sweet Onion Slices to serve with cold meat or with baked tomatoes and baked squash.

Don't be inhibited by custom. It is time we Canadians started some new ones, good enough for handing on to the new generations.

Kay Spicer

Is the mood to rustle up a happy ending for dinner? No one will gripe if you try today's treats.

You'll savor the peak of flavor with chilled grape and lime dessert — a great way to welcome the late summer, early fall season. This dessert presents grapes at their finest.

It's so nice to have a bevy of grapes around the house. They're perfect for lunch boxes and tailgate picnics before the game.

Grapes fit will into a well-balanced food plan. Check Canada's Food Guide. Consider the basic four food categories from which you should select each day. Enjoy a bunch of grapes as a snack with a glass of milk. Pretty up a salad plate with a cluster. Slip them into sauces for sea food and poultry. Morning cereal takes on a new sparkle topped with fresh grapes.

FISH AND GRAPES

(Similar to Sole Veronique, a classic dish in French cuisine. Makes 6 servings)

- 12 fillets of sole, rolled and skewered with toothpicks OR
- 6 serving size pieces salmon fillet
- 2 cups milk
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 12 medium-size mushrooms, sliced
- 2 cups seedless grapes, washed and drained
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 4 tablespoons flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon white pepper
- ½ cup buttered bread crumbs
- ¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese

Arrange fish in a single layer in a flame-proof baking dish (like Corning ware). Add milk. Bring to a boil; reduce heat; poach fish for 5 minutes. Remove baking dish from heat. Drain off milk carefully and reserve it. Heat 2 tablespoons butter in a saucepan; saute mushrooms 3 to 4 minutes. Remove with slotted spoon. Arrange mushrooms and grapes over fish. Heat additional butter in saucepan; stir in flour; cook over gentle heat, stirring for 1 to 2 minutes. Stir in reserved milk slowly. Cook, stirring constantly until sauce is thickened and smooth. Season with salt and white pepper. Pour over fish. Sprinkle breadcrumbs then Parmesan over sauce. Bake, uncovered, in 400 deg. F oven 20 minutes. Serve immediately from casserole or arrange on serving platter.

LIME-GRAPE DESSERT

(Makes 8 to 10 servings)

- 1 package (6 ounces) lime-flavored gelatin
- 2 cups boiling water
- 1 cup cold water
- 2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
- 2 cups whipping cream, (35%)
- 2 cups seedless grapes

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Mix in cold water and lemon juice. Chill until gelatin is slightly thickened. Whip cream stiff. Fold cream into gelatin. Lightly mix in grapes. Pour into lightly oiled 8-inch springform pan or 8-cup mold. Chill until firm. (several hours or overnight). Unmold to serve.

GRAPE PARFAIT

(Makes 6 servings)

- 1 package (4 serving size) vanilla pudding mix
- Milk
- 1½ cup halved seeded grapes
- 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- ½ cup whipping cream (35%)

Prepare pudding mix according to package directions using milk required. Cool. Fold in grape halves and lemon rind. Whip cream; fold into grape mixture. Spoon into dessert glasses. Chill ½ to 1 hour in refrigerator before serving.

Winemakers all smiles

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — California's billion-dollar wine industry is all sunny smiles as winemakers, well into the season's grape harvest, predict a vintage year which might be tops for the decade.

"I think the harvest is going to be great," said Rod Strong, winemaker at the 1,600-acre Sonoma Vineyards in Northern California. "The sugars are really perfect, it's just a lovely balance."

A heat wave last week capped a almost ideal growing season, coming when the wineries were beginning to harvest the first of the grapes to reach maturity. The grape squeeze lasts about two months.

The grape weather was perfect, said Don Sebastiani of Sebastiani Vineyards in Sonoma. He said a mild spring and temperate weather provided excellent conditions for growing grapes.

As for the last minute heat, "you couldn't have asked for anything better," he said.

California's 327,133 acres of vineyards, with their 125 different varieties of wine grapes, produced 430.7 million gallons of wine in 1978, said Harvey Posert of the Wine Institute in San Francisco.

Posert said there are more than 300 wineries in the state, which produced $1 billion worth of wine last year. He said California wineries amount to 68.5 per cent of the wine market in the U.S. and one per cent abroad.

Utensils brought to school

VERACRUZ, Mex. — You can be pretty much on your own when you attend cooking school in Mexico.

At least that's the way it is at the Escuela Industrial Adolfo Lopez Mateos, a trade school in Veracruz. In addition to classes in beauty, sewing, machine embroidery, painting, piano, typing, shorthand and other subjects, the school offers a three year cooking program.

The cooking students meet three mornings a week in a large classroom that contains two big work tables and a blue and white tiled kitchen partitioned off at one end.

Recipes are dictated in class, and the students come before class starts to prepare the dishes, bringing not only the ingredients but their own utensils.

It took three people — Tity Rodriguez, who is enrolled in the course, her cousin, Julia, and this writer — to carry the equipment needed for a showy dish of baked fish garnished with Russian salad and cooked shrimp.

When the fish was done, Tity prepared it for presentation, placing salad on each side, sprinkling the salad with shrimp and garnishing the dish with egg wedges. One student suggested adding tomato slices for color and another advised filling some empty places with bunches of parsley.

(Baked Robalo)

1 (3- to 3 1-4 pound) whole fish
Salt, pepper
A few small bay leaves
Thyme
Oregano
1-4 cup olive oil
1-2 cup white wine
Ensalada Rusa
1-2 pound cooked, shelled shrimp
3 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
2 tomatoes, sliced or cut in wedges

Have fish man eviscerate and scale fish. Remove fins. Wash fish well and pat dry with paper towels. Cut 3 or 4 diagonal slits across each side.

Place fish in a large shallow baking pan, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Insert bay leaves, thyme and oregano in slits. Pour oil over fish and rub in. Pour wine over fish. Bake at 350 degrees until tender, about 25 minutes.

Remove fish from oven. Carefully remove skin from sides, but not from head and tail. Place fish on large serving platter. Place Ensalada Rusa on either side. Arrange cooked shrimp around the salad. Garnish with egg and tomato slices. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Ensalada Rusa (Russian Salad)

4 medium boiling potatoes, peeled, cooked and cubed
1 (8-ounce) can peas, drained
3 carrots, cooked and diced
1 (9-ounce) package frozen cut green beans, thawed and cooked
1-2 cup mayonnaise
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper

Combine potatoes, peas, carrots and beans. Toss gently with mayonnaise and season with salt and pepper to taste. Makes 8 servings.

Try boulangere— fishes delicious

It is odd that in French cooking so many of the best-received dishes stem directly from the countryside rather than from the cities. Fish boulangere could be counted as one of those dishes. Boulangere means in the style of the baker's wife. It is called that because the dish is baked and one of its characteristics is a final sprinkling of the baker's bread crumbs before it is put in the oven.

Fish boulangere — it is delicious made with fresh halibut or cod fillets — consists of fillets folded and baked with potatoes and onions sliced wafer-thin.

It is a simple dish, for after the fillets are surrounded by the vegetables and sprinkled with crumbs and butter it simply requires half an hour of baking.

In essence halibut or cod boulangere could easily serve as a meal in itself, but, personally, I prefer it with another vegetable such as vichy carrots or perhaps with a well-dressed green salad make a trifle piquant with the addition of a good grade of imported mustard.

The preparation of such a meal is simplicity itself. Once the dish is in the oven there is a half-hour for preparing salad greens, salad dressing or whatever else strikes your fancy.

HALIBUT BOULANGERE

1¼ pounds potatoes, peeled and sliced as thinly as possible, about 4 cups.
1 onion, about one-third pound, peel and sliced wafer-thin.
12 tablespoons butter.
4 halibut or cod fillets, about two and one-half pounds.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
¼ cup chopped parsley.
1 clove garlic, finely minced.
½ cup bread crumbs.
½ cup dry white wine.

1. Preheat the oven to 425 degrees.

2. Prepare the potatoes and keep covered with cold water.

3. Prepare the onion rings and set aside.

4. Rub the bottom of an oval baking dish with six tablespoons of butter.

5. Fold each halibut fillet over itself and arrange down the centre of the baking dish. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

6. Drain the potatoes and put them in a bowl. Add the onions, parsley, garlic, salt and pepper to taste. Blend well.

7. Arrange the vegetable mixture around the fillets. Dot with the remaining butter. Sprinkle the fish with bread crumbs. Add the wine.

8. Bring the dish to a boil on top of the stove and place in the oven. Bake 30 minutes. As the fish bakes, tilt the baking dish and spoon the liquid over the fish.

Yield: 4 servings.

VICHY CARROTS

1 pound carrots.
1 cup water.
2 tablespoons sugar.
1½ teaspoons sugar.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

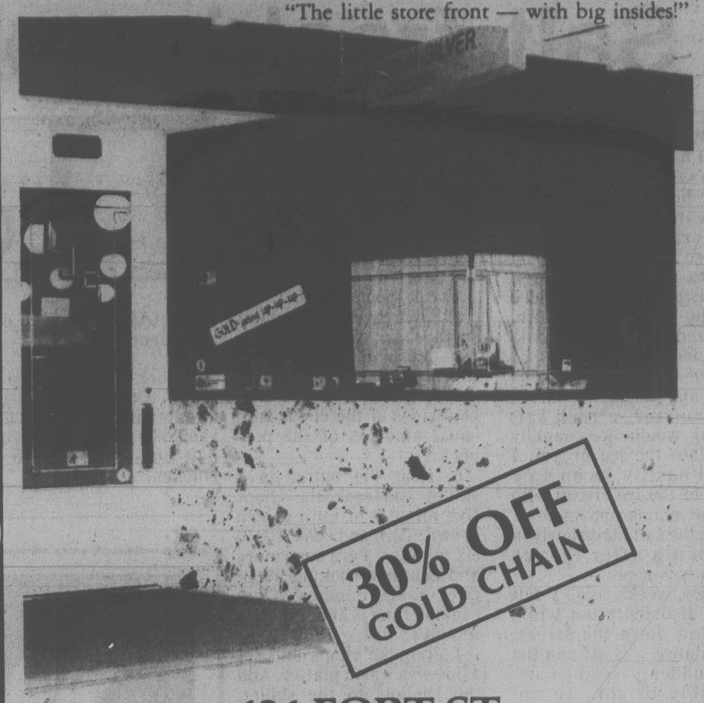

1. Trim and scrape the carrots and cut them into very thin rounds.

2. Put the carrot rounds in a deep casserole and add the water. It should barely cover the carrots. Add the water, sugar, salt and pepper.

3. Cook about 10 minutes and uncover. Cook over high heat about 15 to 20 minutes or until all the water has evaporated. Toss and stir the carrots so that they cook evenly. Cook until the carrots are nicely glazed and lightly browned.

Yield: 4 servings.

Catch our Fall.

The weather's good, the summer crowds are gone and, best of all, you can take advantage of off-season rates.

Many hotels and resort areas have special fall packages. So give your favourite holiday spot a call.

Or see your travel agent. His services won't cost you anything and he can be a big help. He'll tell you about everything from a lovely 3-day city stay to a grand 16-day Circle Tour.

Or go sailing, sailing up the spectacular Inside Passage.

Tennis anyone? Or how about a round of golf?

If you'd rather be fishing, the big ones are waiting.

Dig gold? You'll love exploring the gold rush country.

If the city is your beat, sample the first class restaurants, interesting shops and diverse cultural activities of our two cities by the sea — Vancouver and Victoria.

So this fall, enjoy it.

Salt freak's now a salt-free one

Craig Claiborne

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

NEW YORK — Even as a child I had almost an addiction to salt. It was customary in my home to make fresh ice cream every Sunday in a hand-cranked freezer. To prepare it, the dasher would go into the freezer barrel, the custard would be added and the barrel set to turn, surrounded by a heavy packing of ice and rock salt.

When the ice cream was ready and the lid lifted from the canister, a rock salt crystal would occasionally drop into the ice cream. I would hastily scoop up a spoon of the ice cream with the salt chunk and taste it, letting the salt melt slowly in my mouth after the ice cream was gone.

A few weeks ago, I felt some disorientation while strolling down the street. My balance was off and the sun suddenly seemed unbearably bright. An acquaintance familiar with my bizarre appetite for salt suggested I might be suffering from hypertension.

He sent me to a well-known diet specialist, Dr. Joseph Rechtschaffen, an internist, who is on the staff of Doctors Hospital and Beekman-Downtown.

He confirmed the hypertension. When I described my salt-consuming habits, he frowned and handed me a diet sheet which I followed for the next few weeks.

While pursuing my diet, I was often asked what I could do to give my food sparkle without resorting to the use of salt in any form.

Principal aids were members of the onion family, notably garlic, scallions, onions and chives. Garlic became essential in salad dressings and tomato sauces. Scallions can be sprinkled on most soups and on fish and salads. Equally important were citrus fruits, principally lemon and lime juice squeezed on fish, chicken or veal, or added to salads, soups and fruit desserts.

I want to add that these recipes have not been checked nor approved by Rechtschaffen.

Veal Chops With Green Peppercorns (No salt)

4 one-inch-thick veal chops, each weighing about ½ pound
2 tablespoons drained peppercorns, packed in unsalted liquid
3 tablespoons unsalted butter or oil
1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar

1. Place the chops on a flat surface.

2. Crush the peppercorns well with the flat side of a heavy kitchen knife. Rub both sides of the chops with equal amounts of the pepper.

3. Heat the butter in a skillet and cook the chops five minutes or until golden brown. Turn and cook five to six minutes. Turn once more and continue cooking about five or six minutes. Total cooking time is about 15 to 18 minutes.

4. Remove chops and set aside on a warm platter. Add the shallots to the skillet, then the vinegar. Stir all around and add the water. Stir to dissolve the brown particles on the bottom and sides of the pan. Return chops to pan, turn them in the pan sauce and serve.

Curried Chicken (Unsalted)

1 chicken, 3 pounds, cut into serving pieces
½ teaspoon unsalted butter or oil
3 tablespoons curry powder
¾ cup finely chopped onion
2 bay leaves
1 teaspoon finely minced garlic
one-third cup finely chopped celery
½ cup finely chopped peeled tomatoes
1 slightly tart but sweet green apple
1 small, sweet but not overly ripe banana
1 cup unsalted chicken broth (see recipe)
Yogurt for garnish

1. Cut around the perimeter of each chicken piece and cut away and discard fat.

3. Sprinkle with curry and stir without turning the pieces of chicken. Sprinkle with onion, bay leaves and cook briefly, about one minute. Sprinkle with garlic and celery and stir. Sprinkle with tomatoes and cook about one minute.

4. Core, peel and slice the apple. Cut the slices into quarter-inch cubes. There should be about one and one-half cups. Add this to the chicken.

5. Peel and dice the banana. There should be about one-third cup. Add this to the chicken. Add the broth. If the chili is used, add it. Cover and cook over low heat 20 minutes. Uncover and continue cooking 10 to 15 minutes longer. Serve with cold yogurt and unsalted hot rice.

Chicken Broth (Saltless)

3 pounds meaty chicken bones such as necks
½ cup coarsely chopped leeks, or add an additional amount of onion
½ cup coarsely chopped onion
½ cup coarsely chopped carrots
½ cup coarsely chopped celery
1 clove garlic, left whole
6 peppercorns, crushed
1 bay leaf
½ teaspoon dried thyme
20 cups of water

1. Put the bones in the kettle and add and add cold water to cover. Bring to a full rolling boil, drain and discard water. Run the bones under cold running water until chilled. Drain.

2. Return the bones to a clean kettle and add the remaining ingredients and water. Bring to the boil and simmer uncovered two hours.

3. Strain the broth through a colander or sieve. Discard the chicken solids.

Lamb cut is used only rarely

Question: I was reading an English novel dealing with manners and mores of the 19th century. Mention was made of a lavish dinner in a grand banquet hall and the principal dish was a baron of lamb. What is it?

Answer: A baron of lamb is a choice dish that is rarely served except, as noted, on grand occasions. It is a single "cut" of lamb that consists of the two legs and the saddle of the animal, which are left intact when it is butchered. The baron, which looks a bit stately, is spit-roasted or sometimes braised and served with the natural drippings or juice. The roast lamb is almost invariably accompanied by an assortment of vegetables.

Q:

While vacationing in Scotland my husband and I sampled a local specialty called rambledethumps. It was made with potatoes, cabbage, cheese and scallions. Can you tell me the origin of the name and how I can prepare such a dish?

A:

The origin of the name eludes me. A friend of mine, a good cook and a native of Edinburgh, informs me that basically the dish consists of cooking equal amounts of potatoes and cabbage in separate kettles until tender. The vegetables are then "mashed together" with butter and seasoned with a generous amount of black pepper. Chopped onions cooked in butter are sometimes added to it. Cheese, he states, would make a nice addition, but he does not believe it is standard.

Q:

One well-known magazine dealing in food often uses the phrase "sweat the onions" in preparing certain dishes. How do you sweat an onion?

A:

The word is a translation of a commonly used culinary term in France. The French is "suer les oignons." It means adding the onions to a saucepan, generally using butter or oil and cooking the onions without browning.

The onions are generally cooked, covered, over very low heat. The reason for this is obviously a question of taste. Onions that have been cooked until they are dry or browned have a different taste than those that have been cooked in the gentler fashion.

I find the translation of the phrase a bit pretentious and don't recall ever having used it in a recipe. "Cook the onions over low heat in a tightly covered saucepan without letting them brown" sounds better to my American ears.

Q:

I do not have access to fresh seafood but I have a great liking for a dish I once ate in an Italian restaurant, a scungilli or conch salad. Fortunately, an acquaintance has sent me several cans of scungilli. Are you familiar with canned scungilli, and do you have a recipe for the salad?

A:

I am indeed familiar with canned scungilli and keep a supply in my pantry. It is a bit expensive but available in shops that stock fine Italian foods in New York.

Here is a recipe for the salad:

Scungilli (Conch) Salad

2 cups sliced scungilli (conch), freshly cooked or canned and drained
1 tablespoon lemon juice
3 tablespoons olive oil
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
½ teaspoon finely chopped garlic
¼ teaspoon crushed hot red pepper flakes
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley

1. Drain the scungilli and put it in a bowl.

2. Add the lemon juice, olive oil, salt, pepper, garlic, pepper flakes and parsley. Toss. Spoon onto a serving dish and garnish with lemon wedges.

Yield: 2 to 4 servings.

Note: Canned scungilli is available in many markets that specialize in fine Italian foods. One of them, in Manattan, is Manganaro's at 488 Ninth Avenue (between 37th and 38th Streets).

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times, 229 West 43d Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Unfortunately unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

Vegetable-pork dish a real timesaver

STIR—FRY PORK

2 tablespoons corn starch
1 tablespoon imported soy sauce
1 tablespoon plus ½ teaspoon dry sherry
½ pound well-trimmed pork butt or tenderloin
4 cups vegetables, either a single ingredient or in combination: carrots, broccoli, green beans and snow peas (see note)
Sauce, see recipe
3 tablespoons oil, peanut or corn
1 or 2 cloves garlic, minced
2 to 3 slices ginger root, minced (if unavailable, omit; do not use powdered ginger)
¼ tablespoon salt.

1. Make a mixture of the corn starch, soy sauce and one tablespoon dry sherry.

2. Cut the pork into slivers across the grain (about ¼ inch wide by 2 inches long).

3. Marinate the pork for about an hour in the mixture of corn starch, soy sauce and dry sherry.

4. While pork is marinating prepare vegetables: slice carrots diagonally; cut broccoli flower heads with short slices; cut green beans into two-inch lengths; leave snow peas whole.

5. Prepare sauce and set aside.

6. Combine one-half teaspoon sherry with scallions, garlic, ginger root and one-quarter teaspoon salt in a bowl and set aside.

7. When ready to cook pork, heat wok or large skillet until very hot. add two tablespoons oil and heat 30 seconds longer.

8. Add scallion, garlic and gingerroot mixture to wok and stir quickly for a few seconds, then add pork.

9. Stir-fry until pork has lost its pink color, about three to four minutes, then remove all ingredients from pan and set aside.

10. Add one more tablespoon oil to pan, heat, and add vegetables. If you are combining slow-cooking vegetables, such as carrots, with those that cook faster, such as bean sprouts, add the fast-cooking ones toward the end of this step.

11. Stir-fry for a few minutes to coat vegetables with oil. Add sauce and continue to stir-fry until vegetables are tender-crisp.

12. Return cooked pork, scallions, garlic and ginger root to pan with vegetables and stir-fry briefly to mix well. Serve with rice, bulgur or noodles.

Note: The main vegetables may be supplemented with thinly sliced canned or fresh bamboo shoots or water chestnuts, celery (sliced diagonally), sliced onion, scallions cut into two-inch lengths, bean sprouts, green or red sweet peppers cut into bite-sized chunks, or — family tastes permitting — a few fresh hot peppers.

Sauce

¼ to ½ cup chicken or beef boullion or stock (use the larger quantity if using firmer vegetables.)
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1 tablespoon sherry
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar

Place all ingredients in a bowl and stir to blend.

SOCIALIST SCIENCE
We are familiar with the reasons why a frontierless, wageless, moneyless world of free access and voluntary co-operation will not work. "People are inherently greedy and lazy,; resourses are finite, society will always be elitist, etc." Cyril May of the Socialist Party of Great Britain will debunk these theories on the Channel 10 Cable Talk Show, Friday, 8:00 PM. HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121; your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Local shows offer last chance

Two smaller local flower and vegetable shows will be held this Saturday for those who have missed the big ones of the past month.

These two are not necessarily smaller in scope for each lists well over 100 classes for exhibitors, but the shows are open for fewer hours. The color impact, however, will be about equal.

Gordon Head Garden Club stages its 25th Anniversary Fall Show in St. Aidan's United Church Hall at 1691 Broadmead, corner of Richmond and Cedar Hill Cross Road. Doors open to the public from 2 to 7 p.m. Saturday.

It does not seem 25 years ago that the first show was enjoyed in the small community hall on Tyndall. I remember the enthusiasm and interest in the fine showing of flowers, fruits and vegetables.

For this week's shows I notice the only flower listed for the perennial classes is Michaelmas-daisy (perennial aster). At least a half dozen others are as worthy of competition in shows as they are of a place in the amateur's fall garden.

Where are the fine richly colored heleniums, physostagia with its curiously hinged flowers earning the nickname of Obedience-plant, the Sunflower group of helianthus, the scented milk-white artemisia and the splendid Redhot-pokers?

Garden clubs cover the showing of these flowers conveniently, perhaps for catalogue space saving, by listing either "other perennials not listed — three stems" or "a vase of perennials . . . not more than four kinds." While classes of this type do occasionally bring forth flowers no longer often seen, they don't make the same effect or get the same attention from viewers as those in separate classes for each flower of the season.

The Esquimalt Garden Club will show chrysanthemums and dahlias for their chief color attractions as in the Gordon Head show along with potted plants and floral arrangements.

It is these two latter sections of flowers shows that give opportunity to apartment dwellers to exhibit their skills. The potted plants must have been grown by the exhibitors; the arrangement material may be either bought or obtained from a friend's garden. Or it may be dried or fresh material from the wild in some classes.

Fruit and vegetable sections are always attractive and are more so now as freshness becomes increasingly a desirable standard. The visiting public, some of whom may not be garden producers, are impressed by the general appearance of desirability, not by size alone but by freshness of coloring and apparent firmness of texture.

Every balcony, patio and rooftop will be growing its quota of fresh produce before long, I am sure, as they do in other cities across the country. If it is possible in harsher climates, the opportunities should be doubled here in our more moderate conditions.

For this Saturday, see it all at the two fall shows, Gordon Head and Esquimalt. These are the last for this season of which I have been notified.

Cheese poisons

BUDAPEST (Reuter) — Infected curd cheese caused a recent outbreak of food poisoning in Hungary that has affected more than 700 people, most of them schoolchildren, officials said Tuesday.

TV blamed for slide in English

When a child spends more time watching television than he does in the classroom, his capacity in English should not be surprising, teachers' spokesman Trevor Calkins said today.

Calkins, president of Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, was responding to criticism of the quality of writing and efforts of English teachers Monday by members of the school board.

But he urged a level-headed approach to solving the difficulty of effective English teaching in a system where resources are below average and reading and writing at home is declining.

He said teachers might devote more attention to written work on a cross-disciplinary basis — in science, math and social studies as well as in English.

Or more teachers might be assigned to English subjects, provided there is a willingness to forego non-academic optional courses and more money might be spent to upgrade the system.

He said the GVTA is all in favor of improving English standards in the community.

"The average child spends more time watching TV than he does going to school in his lifetime, which tells you something about how much he reads," Calkins said.

Reading and writing are no longer common in the home, but the school system is expected to perpetuate an old system.

Students must have more time to write, and that means teachers will need more time to mark papers or teach smaller classes, Calkins said.

Additive boosts mileage by 20%

HAMILTON (CP) — Businessman Garnet Webster has opened Canada's first gas station selling an additive reported to increase mileage by more than 20 per cent.

He said he has sold about 119,250 litres (26,500 gallons) of gas treated with the additive at 22.9 cents a litre, the same price charged at nearby stations for ordinary gasoline. An average station in the city sells about 121,500 litres (27,000 gallons) a month.

"The people coming in are very enthusiastic," Webster, a former chartered accountant, said. "They're saying things like they have more power, they are getting better mileage, and for diesel vehicles, it's decreasing the amount of emissions."

Webster said the additive is used widely in the United States. In Pittsburgh, its use resulted in an average 21.2-per-cent improvement in mileage.

The additive, which costs about $40 a gallon, can be used on its own but is more efficient when mixed with gasoline at a ratio of 30 millilitres (one ounce) per 37.8 litres (10 gallons) of gasoline.

Indian's death deplored

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The death of a native Indian is a commentary on the way violent alcohol-related deaths among Indians are taken for granted, says city coroner Dr. John Wrinch.

Wrinch said the death of Geroge Joseph Clarence Fraser, 34, was accidental but reflected the need for improvement in social and economic conditions for natives.

Fraser died June 30 when he was hit by a Canadian National Railways train in this southern Interior community.

An inquiry found that Fraser was drunk at the time and was lying on or between the railroad tracks when he was hit.

Saanich body shelves 'second-class' Royal plan

A $2.3 million project to turn the Royal Theatre into a lower Vancouver Island centre for the performing arts today was called "second class" by Ald. John Mika of Saanich.

The proposal was shelved by Saanich finance committee Tuesday night.

Mika said Victoria "interests" should pay the bulk of Royal renovation costs because they scuttled plans to build a proper concert hall here.

A 2,500-seat concert and stage hall the University of Victoria offered to build several years ago was killed because "downtown movers and shakers took a parochial view," he charged.

University Centre doesn't fill the void and neither does the Royal Theatre, Mika said.

Renovating the 1,450-seat Royal won't create the kind of facility the area needs to help the economy, mainly because it's too small, he said.

Mika won't vote for the project unless a referendum of Saanich ratepayers is called on cost-sharing arrangements.

"I don't see why we should have to pay," he said.

Ald. Howard Sturrock, who is on the three-member Royal Theatre committee, said financing will be discussed at a later date.

All the committee wants now is approval-in-principle from Saanich, Victoria and Oak Bay, the three municipalities that own the aging theatre.

The finance committee Tuesday called for a meeting with the theatre committee first.

The committee also wants time to investigate the feasibility of building a new theatre before it makes a decision.

A new theatre is rejected as unnecessary and too expensive in a recently completed theatre committee report.

Cost of building a new performing arts facility is estimated between $12 and $15 million, Sturrock said.

The report recommends addition of a two-level entrance foyer and 50 seats.

Extensive repairs to roof, outside walls and a lot of interior work could turn the faded old building into "the major performing arts facility to serve lower Vancouver Island," the report states.

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis says in a letter to theatre committee chairman Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie the provincial government is willing to a contribute to a "significant financial extent."

Curtis also dismisses the idea of a new building. He said a new theatre project is unrealistic in a time of government fiscal restraint.

Saanich, Victoria and Oak Bay are sharing with the provincial government the $600,000 price of a current renovation project.

About one-third of that cost is borne by the goverment.

Sturrock said he would like to see larger participation in the cost-sharing, particularly from Esquimalt.

The upgrading project will take three years.

Royal Oak can wait: Fraser

Saanich council will have to stew over its industrial park for a while longer without any direction from the province, Highways Minister Alex Fraser indicated Tuesday.

Fraser said the decision on whether to approve the Royal Oak project is a controversial one which he is not going to be rushed into making.

The minister left town for the rest of the week today, and said he won't be guided by someone else's arbitrary deadline in making the decision.

He said he doesn't expect the decision to be made in the immediate future.

The government delay is adding costs to potential developers, Saanich aldermen said earlier.

After council's first deadline of Sept. 10 passed with a testy comment from Fraser that he didn't like deadlines, aldermen decided all it could do was continue putting pressure on Fraser.

Vote bylaw 'watered down'

A "watered-down version" of a bylaw covering election expenditures was approved Tuesday by Saanich finance committee.

Those voting against the controversial bylaw appeared to be aldermen who "could not be elected without an anonymous infusion of funds," Block charged today.

SUICIDE LEAP FOILED: A 16-year-old blonde is grabbed by Const. Fiona Shaw after threateneing for 90 minutes Tuesday to leap from the 12th floor of a west end Vancouver penthouse. Shaw pulled the girl back onto the roof and into the embrace of Const. Tony Smith (right) as a cheer went up from spectators around the neighborhood who had gathered to watch the rescue.

Relief officials and diplomats just back from eastern Thai border areas said Tuesday there has been a marked deterioration in the physical condition of the latest Cambodian arrivals.

One official said that a group of about 1,500 admitted into a camp at Mai Rood on the southeastern border late last week included babies who were just "skin and bones," some adults who were like living skeletons and many persons suffering from malaria, diarrhea and malnutrition.

"These people tell us that as they walk through the forests towards Thailand, they see bodies lying everywhere," the official said.

Diplomatic sources in Bangkok said that newly arrived Cambodians had spoken of large malaria-infested areas where there is very little food and medicine and where there is a heavy mortality rate.

Relief officials said most of the refugees they saw appeared to be civilians under control of Khmer Rouge soldiers loyal to the ousted regime of Premier Pol Pot.

The Khmer Rouge is fighting a guerrilla war against Vietnamese-backed forces of the pro-Soviet administration in Phnom Penh which was installed in January. Both the Khmer Rouge and other sources have predicted the Vietnamese will launch a new major offensive once the present rainy season is over, probably within a month or two.

Diplomatic sources who visited areas along the Cambodian border reported there are still heavy rains in southern areas, and said there does not appear to be a great deal of fighting across the border.

The Cambodians trying to reach Thai territory are fleeing starvation and disease rather than fighting, relief officials said.

"But these are the lucky ones, who have had the will to keep going," one official said. "There must be many who are too weak or have lost the will to go on."

1-child family pays off in China

PEKING (AP) — A Chinese family's most prized possession soon may be the one-child certificate. That scrap of paper will attest to their patriotism and entitle them to cheaper medical care, free education, better housing and larger pensions.

Families that don't have a certificate will find themselves looked down upon by their neighbors and paying more to live in this country more than 900 million people.

Family planning is China's No. 1 social priority and people are reminded daily that a big population stands in the way of modernization and happiness. Zero population growth is the goal for the year 2000.

China is using the carrot-and-stick approach to population control and couples who practice birth control will be rewarded while those who don't will be monetarily punished.

The newspaper Shanghai Liberation Daily recently published the family planning regulations for Shanghai, which has a population of 10.8 million. The rules were passed Aug. 22 by the Shanghai revolutionary committee, the city council.

A couple with one child will receive benefits, a couple with two will receive none, a couple with three will be penalized.

"A one-child certificate will be given to one-child couples who have been sterilized and to couples who promise not to have a second child for four years."

'Pick up your marbles and leave' says mayor

Florence Kovacevic may have to face a bulldozer

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A woman who has spent thousands of dollars renovating a city-owned house in Victoria West was told Tuesday by Mayor Mike Young to "pick up your marbles and leave" if she doesn't like the rental agreement with the city.

Florence Kovacevic rented the rundown Godfeldt property at 1133 Catherine last year for $500 a month, on the understanding that $200 would be rebated if she agreed to put a new roof on, improve the wiring, paint the outside and install a proper heating system.

City manager Jim Bramley told council's land-use planning committee Mrs. Kovacevic didn't fulfil the original terms of the lease, that most of the money was spent on interior renovations.

The city sent her an eviction notice after she failed to pay rent for August and September in a misunderstanding over how much she actually owed, but this has been rescinded.

The committee argued for almost two hours with Mrs. Kovacevic, which led to some hot words from the mayor and Bramley.

"I'm not Simon Legree," said the manager, who was responsible for seeing that the terms of the lease were upheld and who sent out the notice to vacate.

The committee agreed to extend the rental arrangement until the full city council can decide what to do with the house and property.

"It's a short-term expedient until we decide whether to put a bulldozer through the whole place, put a new roof on it or turn it into a mission for people from out of town," an exasperated Mayor Young told Mrs. Kovacevic.

"That means you're not interested in preserving the house," she replied. "When the rains start again, the condition of the house will revert to what it was."

"If you don't like it at $500 a month you can pick up your marbles and leave," Young told her, adding council made a mistake when it rented the house.

Mrs. Kovacevic replied that she had a major investment "in time and unnecessary pain" and said the house was never worth $500 a month, the rental value placed on it by an independent appraiser. She did everything the city asked so far except put on a new roof.

More than $100,000 was spent in Neighborhood Improvement Program funds several years ago to buy the 2½ acres of property, originally for a housing site. It includes frontage on Selkirk Water near the railway trestle.

The house Mrs. Kovacevic occupies was the headquarters for the Vic West Community Association until the community centre in nearby Banfield Park was completed last year.

Since the city hadn't then — and still hasn't — decided what to do with the property, Mrs. Kovacevic asked the city if she could rent the dilapidated vacant house.

Mayor Young said the original idea was that the property would produce some revenue for the city that would go into a reserve fund to be used when Victoria decides on the future use of the Godfeldt site.

"It hasn't quite worked in the idealistic manner council had hoped," he said.

Council last year overruled a recommendation by Bramley for demolition and gave her a short-term lease agreement.

Ald. John Hayes now wants the sloping, treed property preserved as park, especially since land had to be subtracted from Banfield Park to build the Vic West community centre.

Road show Friday

Premier Bill Bennett and Highways Minister Alex Fraser on Friday will officially open the $65 million "missing link" highway to Port Hardy.

Bennett and Fraser will leave Campbell River in a motorcade that will gather local mayors and other local officials along the route to Woss Camp where ribbon cutting ceremonies will be performed at 11 a.m.

The narrow, winding dusty logging road to Port Hardy was so bad in the past that local residents held a regular "missing link" rally to see if anyone could travel the route in one piece.

Medical staff votes non-confidence

By JANE COVERNTON

Board member Peter Bunn echoed the call and went further — he said the whole board should resign.

The call for Prentice to quit came after 120 members of the medical staff were unanimous in voting non-confidence in Prentice at a meeting Tuesday night.

At a press conference today, RJH chief of medical staff Dr. Elinor Powell, said Prenctice has abandoned development of the hospital.

"His only aim appears to be to restrict spending to arbitrarily set limits. If one service is expanded, another is cut back to the danger limit," says Powell.

She said Prentice submitted a budget to the government that was substantially less than the determined need.

This was done despite the fact Health Minister Bob McClelland has announced that the hospital's deficit of $1.5 million dollars would be picked up and that spending limits would not be imposed.

Dr. Powell said the doctors received a letter from McClelland at their meeting assuring them that further funds are available.

Former Conservative leader, Dr. Scott Wallace, who has criticised Prentice in the past, said the meaning of McClelland's letter is clear.

"It's only fair to say that the hospital itself submitted a budget to the government that was less than the need. Part of the blame clearly rests with the financial committee of the board," Wallace said.

The medical staff also criticised Prentice because they were denied input in the selection of a new executive director.

They say they back Micheal Butcher as RJH's new executive director but said Dr. Powell was constantly frustrated in her attempts to discuss the appointment.

The dispute between the doctors and Prentice has been simmering for some time.

Dr. Powell cited a July 3 report in the Times in which Prentice said that the hospital was determined to stay within its budget and said the solution is for fewer people to get sick.

In that report, Prentice suggested that doctors were ordering unnecessary surgery.

Powell said doctors are disturbed that Prentice never publicly corrected those statements and in fact repeated them to a special meeting of the medical staff.

Meanwhile, Peter Bunn, Oak Bay council's representative on the hospital board, said today the whole board is probably to blame for the problems with the doctors and perhaps they should all resign.

He agreed that Prentice must go and suggested he should be replaced at the first board meeting after the

Turn back, passengers pleaded

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Passengers on a Pacific Coastal Airlines plane which crashed in dense fog on northern Vancouver Island Tuesday urged the pilot to turn around moments before the plane struck a tree top and exploded in flames killing four people.

John Mathison, 28, of Campbell River, one of the first rescuers to reach the crash scene, said a survivor told him passengers became alarmed when the plane entered the fog.

They told the pilot not to try to climb over the fog bank, the survivor said.

He told Mathison that suddenly the side of a mountain loomed before them.

The pilot swung the plane sharply into a turn but a wing clipped a tree top.

"As soon as the plane hit, it just blew apart," the survivor told Mathison. "Everything was in flames and we jumped out."

Five of the passengers made it safely out of the wreckage. Four, including pilot Manfred Crandall, 53, of Gabriola Island, did not.

RCMP identified the other three dead as Grant William Horseman, 22, of Port Alberni, and Daniel Lucien Mallette and Peter Grant, both of Victoria.

Grant, 41, was a Sidney alderman.

Grant, of 2009 Courser Drive, worked for the provincial recreation and fitness branch and was on a business trip to Port Hardy to help the community develop a recreation plan.

He leaves his wife and two daughters, aged 12 and 13.

The survivors are Tony Vasha, of Cornerbook, Nfld., James Common, of Nanaimo, George Poplestone, of Ladysmith, Ernest Deer, of Comox and Dan Preshyon, of Nova Scotia.

The plane, a twin-engine 10-seat Britten Norman Islander, was on the final leg of a regularly scheduled flight from Nanaimo to Port Hardy with a stop at Comox.

Steve Smith, 20, who was with Mathison, said the plane was demolished.

Wreckage was strewn over a wide area along a ridge at about the 600-foot elevation 20 kilometres southeast of Port McNeill. Only part of the tail section remained intact.

Smith said four of the survivors were huddled behind an embankment 75 feet from the smoldering wreckage when he, Mathison and Alan Olney, 32, arrived about two hours after the crash.

Three of the survivors were badly burned, the fourth appeared to have a back injury.

A fifth survivor had somehow scrambled down the densely-bushed mountain side and was waiting on a beach when the first rescue party landed.

Three of the survivors are in stable but serious condition in Vancouver General Hospital with major burns.

Two others — Preshyon, 22, and Vasha, 28, — are in stable condition with minor burns.

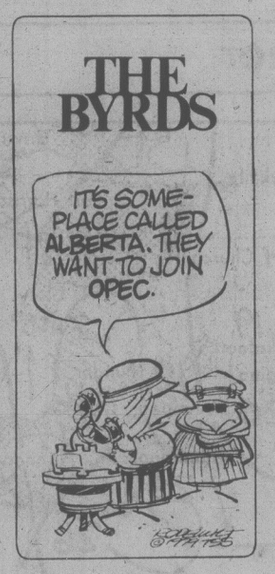

Preshyon and Vasha, who said they survived because they were sitting near the rear of the plane, said passengers were told before takeoff that fog in the Port Hardy area was expected to burn off before noon.

They said in an interview early today in Vancouver that the pilot swerved about for 10 minutes in an attempt to find clear sky.

"He kept going," said Preshyon. "He panicked. This is strictly my opinion anyway.

"He just headed straight into the fog and kept going."

Bryce bites Tory bullet

MONTREAL (CP) — "It's been a rather humiliating two months," sighed Bryce Mackasey Tuesday night, hours after being fired from his $90,000-a-year job as chairman of the Air Canada board of directors.

Rumors of the Liberal appointee's impending dismissal have been rife almost since the day the Progressive Conservatives won the federal election, and Mackasey knew he was a marked man.

"I knew I had it coming ever since a statement by (Roch) LaSalle a couple of weeks ago," Mackasey said while lounging outside the airline's private box at Olympic Stadium during a rain delay in the Montreal Expos-Pittsburgh Pirates baseball game.

LaSalle, the federal supply and services minister, had said the Tories were intent on placing their own supporters into key government jobs, and he called Mackasey's Air Canada job a blatantly political appointment that could not go unanswered.

"I appreciate what Roch LaSalle said," Mackasey commented Tuesday. "At least he told the truth.

"I defy anyone to say I wasn't competent or didn't get along with the board members."

Mackasey refused to give details of the compensation coming to him as a result of being fired.

"There have been a lot of exaggerated statements about my pension," he said. "I'd compare mine to any other normal pension in Air Canada."

Speed limits to rise?

Highways Minister Alex Fraser said Tuesday it is time to look at highway speed limits with a view to raising them.

Fraser said B.C. motorists generally are driving faster than the speed limit and the fault may be with the speed limit itself and not the drivers.

"I've tested it myself and at 80 km/h, you're the last one on the road because everyone is going by. They make me feel like I'm standing still."

He said the highways have been improved and as a result the speed limits may be too low. He has asked his ministry to look at the possibility of raising them.

Specifically, he said, he is concerned about good two-lane roads now posted at 80 km-h.

"Perhaps it is time they were boosted to 90 km/h," Fraser said.

Brush fire threatens city

VENTURA, Calif. (UPI) — More than 500 homes were endangered today by a fast-moving, 18,000-acre brush fire that swung down mountain slopes into the Ventura city limits.

"The major front is burning toward the city of Ventura and is within two miles of the city itself," said County Fire Battalion Chief Dale Miller.

He said "it is already within the city limits," although flames had not reached the downtown area.

"The City of Ventura could be in grave danger when the air warms and begins circulating," Miller said. "That is our most critical area and it doesn't look good at this point."

In other areas of the state, mostly in Southern California, thousands of firefighters from 28 states struggled against at least 10 separate blazes, some threatening homes.

The blaze in Ventura County, about 95 kilometres up the coast from Los Angeles, began Tuesday on Sulphur Mountain near the community of Ojai and was burning out of control on all fronts.

Miller said there was 3 per cent containment shortly after dawn, but "that doesn't mean a thing" because the winds could come up by mid-morning and whip up the flames.

Many residents of Mira Monte and Oak View fled as the flames edged closer to scattered houses. At Oak View, the "entire end of Main Street is a mass of flames," one observer said.

Farther up the coast in Santa Barbara County, the mercury was up to 103 degrees Tuesday when two fires broke out on the brush-covered coastal mountain slopes.

The largest, the 4,000-acre Eagle Canyon blaze, jumped the Pacific Coast Highway and burned to the beach. Part of that fire was burning in the Los Padres National Forest. Fire officials said scattered ranches and homes in the canyon did not appear to be in danger.

$272,657.70 tax evasion fine

HAMILTON (CP) — Simon Freedman, a 79-year-old businessman, was ordered Tuesday by a provincial court judge to pay what was called the highest fine for tax evasion ever levied against an individual Canadian.

Judge Peter Mitchell fined Freedman $272,657.70, which must be paid within 18 months in addition to $400,000 he owes Revenue Canada over unpaid taxes. There have been higher fines levied against firms.

Mitchell said Freedman would have been sentenced to jail but for his age.

Freedman, who worked as scrap manager for Kent Steel Products Ltd. — fined $277,000 for tax evasion Monday — admitted that he acted as a middleman in the sale of $859,607 worth of scrap steel to I. Waxman and Sons Ltd. The company paid in cash and in cheques made out to fictitious names and endorsed by Freedman.

Defence lawyer Murray Mazza said he will appeal the fine, which he said would bankrupt his client.

U.S. cracks down on DC-9 skins

Times News Services

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) today ordered all U.S. airlines operating one type of DC-9 jetliner to inspect for cracks in the planes' metal skin.

The order, contained in a telegraphed airworthiness directive, was prompted by an incident Monday in which the tail cone of an Air Canada DC-9 broke away while the plane was en route from Boston to Nova Scotia. The plane lost cabin pressure and had control difficulties but returned to Boston and landed safely.

Air Canada said today a "stress crack" had shown up four months ago in x-rays of the plane, but has yet to determine "how or why" it was overlooked.

Inspections this week have disclosed cracks on four other Air Canada DC-9s located in Toronto, Ottawa, Regina and Halifax.

FAA spokesman Dennis Feldman said the airworthiness directive "requires airlines to inspect for cracks in the aft pressure bulkhead, the emergency exit door jamb and bulkhead skin within 10 landings after receipt of the telegram for airplanes having more than 15,000 landings."

Feldman said said the order applies to those DC-9s that are not equipped with a stairway at the rear of the plane.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed Tuesday that the problem with the DC-9s has been known to the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration for three years, and the FAA approved modifications on the planes of other airlines to fix the problem.

Texas International revealed in Dallas that after discovering cracks in the tail section of one of its DC-9s three years ago engineers strengthened the tail section and reduced the problem to one of routine maintenance. The airline's other aircraft were then modified.

An Air Canada spokesman said he was unaware of any notification from FAA on the DC-9 problem but that the airline was told in 1976 by the manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas Inc., of the possibility of cracks in the rear pressure bulkheads of DC-9s.

He said a McDonnell Douglas service bulletin at that time gave airlines the option of making the structural modification or accelerating x-ray inspection of the bulkheads.

CBS News reported Tuesday that FAA computer records showed tail cones of other DC-9s have fallen off accidentally at least six times before, although the Air Canada incident was the first time a tail cone fell off during flight.

Don McGillivray, president of the airline, said today Crandall, a seven-year veteran pilot with the firm, had been advised there was fog in the area but that it would likely burn off by noon.

Smith, Olney and Mathison were working on board the fishing vessel Western Monarch when they spotted the plane come in low over the water.

Smith said the plane disappeared into the shroud-like fog and started to climb. A minute later they heard it crash.

The Coast Guard vessel Narwhal was cruising nearby. Its crew saw the crash on their radar set and pinpointed the location.

Five fishing vessels including the Western Monarch, Cape Canso, Cape Lazo, Robert II, Whiskey 10, and the two Coast Guard cutters Narwhal and Rider raced to the area.

Smith said it took him and his two companions nearly two hours to fight their way over the rocky, densely-bushed terrain.

The rescue operation involved about two dozen persons from the various boats and a nearby logging camp which sent a team of paramedics.

Two helicopters chartered in Port Hardy, an RCMP helicopter and another out of the U.S. Coast Guard station at Whidby Island were dispatched. But weather conditions made it impossible for the helicopters to get to the crash scene.

Three of the survivors had to be brought out by stretcher, an operation that took about five hours, Smith said. One of the survivors walked out.

When they finally reached the beach as night was falling, the survivors were airlifted to hospitals in Port Hardy and Port McNeill and then transferred to Vancouver at 8 p.m.

Victoria pilot Jim Gillespie said today the crash points out a deficiency in weather reporting for pilots on the west coast.

"I think a major cause of this accident is simply the government's failure to provide enough weather stations giving out reports that pilots can rely on," he said.

Gillespie said most of the weather information in outlying areas is supplied by lighthouse keepers.

But they emphasize conditions for mariners, giving visibility reports but generally nothing on cloud ceiling.

He said that because of the lack of aviation weather stations "people are starting to lose confidence in safely flying on the coast.

"We have the worst safety record in the world here, and nobody seems to be doing anything about it."

McGillivray agreed weather information is inadequate.

"It's a big problem. But whether the fog was the cause of this crash we won't know until the accident investigators complete their investigation."

The investigation, which began today, was hampered this morning by thick fog which prevented Ministry of Transport officials from reaching the scene.

The crash was the second for Pacific Coast Airlines this year. Six persons were killed April 19 when another twin-engine plane crashed on take-off at Cassidy airport near Nanaimo. An inquest is set to begin Nov. 5.

So far this year a total of 44 persons have been killed in air crashes in British Columbia. The final death toll last year was 121, swelled by the 43 deaths in the crash of a Pacific Western Airlines jet at Cranbrook in February.

Other 1979 fatalities include seven killed Aug. 30 in the crash of a Trans Provincial Airlines plane at Prince Rupert's Digby Island airport.

RJH chairman urged to quit

annual general meeting of the hospital society, when Prentice's term is up.

"Prentice has self destructed before my very eyes," says Bunn.

"By his rash public statements he's destroyed his effectiveness within every facet of the hospital."

Bunn charged that the budget was forwarded to the government without adequate discussion.

"There hasn't been any detailed discussion of the budget. It's the public's business. It is up to the board of directors to look at every department carefully. This hasn't been done."

Bunn said even the finance committee did not spend enough time on the budget.

McClelland, meanwhile, said the matter is strictly out of his hands.

But he gave Prentice a firm vote of confidence while chiding the doctors for their actions.

"In think Terry has done a tremendous job at the Royal Jubilee, especially in the last couple of months when there have been changes in the whole structure of the hospital.

McClelland noted that he and Prentice have had some royal battles over the last few months, especially over financing but said Prentice always stuck to his guns.

The health minister said, however, the medical staff, "might well look to themselves at the way they've handled the situation.

"It seems to me they're developing a habit of running to the press before going to their own board," McClelland said.

But Dr. Powell defended the doctors' action in going public, saying they believe this is the only way they can get any results.

McClelland said the doctors have a responsibility to deal with the board and it has the ultimate responsibility for the operation of the hospital.

While some doctors might not like tht situation and want it changed, McClelland said that's not going to happen in the near future.

Prentice is in England on a holiday and is not expected back in time for the Sept. 27 board meeting at which the medical staff will make their complaints.

He added, however, that he still has a seven-year contract with the airline — the length of the appointment that he received from the previous Liberal government last December.

Mackasey said he was counting on serving a full seven years.

"I thought it was a challenging job, and I've enjoyed it. Frankly, I really felt secure.

"I'll tell you one thing," he continued. "As long as I was chairman of Air Canada, the headquarters would remain in Montreal.

"A lot of people would like to see it (the headquarters) moved out," Mackasey said, without identifying the persons who favor a move.

Although "it became obvious that I was a target for no other reason than that I was a Liberal . . . I feel no malice toward anybody,"

Questioned on his future plans, Mackasey said "I've had some pretty exciting opportunities suggested. In any case, I don't intend to hide behind a tree somewhere."

Mackasey was fired as chairman of Air Canada Tuesday, a victim of the new Tory government's determination to rid top government posts of holdoyers from the previous Liberal administration.

News of Mackasey's dismissal and the appointment of former chairman Pierre Taschereau as a temporary replacement came in a terse statement from Transport Minister Don Mazankowski's office, but it appeared the ex-Liberal cabinet minister's fate had been sealed well in advance.

With the transport minister present at a special meeting of airline directors here Tuesday, Mackasey fought to stay in the $90,000-a-year post. Throughout the day, he staunchly maintained that his job was not in jeopardy.

Mazankowski's statement said the board members "unanimously concurred with the action taken."
